PUBLIC MEETING.

A public meeting of the electors of the Riding of Lennox and Addington, was held in the Council Chamber, Napanee, last Saturday, Sept. 30th, 1905, to discuss the recent action of the Dominion Parliament in increasing the sessional indemnity paid to members and in pensioning ex-cabinet ministers. The Town Hall had been promised for the meeting and up to the last minute was thought available for that purpose. Many persons finding the door closed and locked, went away thinking there would be no meeting. It was, however, a representative meeting and unanimous in its condemnation of our Dominion legislators' late act on the "Public Chest."

Mr. Wm. Grant and the Chair. Price, Ira B. Hudgins, T. Jamieson, M.P., E. B. Ellis, M.P.P., Dr. Ward, M.P.P., E. B. Switzer, F. VanDeMagert, R. St. Bricco, Manly Jones and Chas. Anderson, who had never before been united on a political platform, were unanimous in condemning all the members of the government and of the opposition in the Dominion House. In fact the meeting was as one man on the question and the leader of the opposition is certainly certainly but Dr. Ward's salary of $5,000 as minister of customs, and Mr. Foster's salary of $5,000 as minister of finance, are considered sufficient, and that placed on such a footing that he might not appear as a paid servant of the government.

2nd. The increase of $1,000 to Senators and Members of the Commons, is an outrage and a shame. The electors were elected on a seasonal indemnity and if $1,000 and $1,500 is not believed they represent their constituents in the manner they have a right to expect.

3rd. The salaries of Judges must have been satisfactory, judging from the number of applicants for the vacancy on the bench. Therefore, why the increase?

4th. The superannuation of the ex-cabinet ministers is simply unwarrantable. That men who have received good salaries while in office should become a charge on the country for any amount, is to establish a system which will end in Poultry Farms for the superannuation of ex-cabinet ministers.

And we hereby pledge ourselves as electors to use our votes and influence to oppose any candidate who will not pledge himself, if elected to Parliament, to fly his vote and influence endeavor to have the salary grab act of 1905 repealed.—Com.

SCOTT'S EMULSION

DEADLY THAN FAMINE.

Neglected catarrh sooner or later causes consumption which destroys more human beings than famine and war combined. The way "Catarrhozone" cures catarrh is very very simple. It first kills the germs that causes the irritation; then by soothing away the inflammation and healing it cures the discharge, thawing and dropping in the throat. Catarrhozone is continually from catarrh" writes Ernest R. Dakin of Rosemont. "and I certainly knew what it was to be free from headache and pain over the eyes. Catarrhozone relieved me at once and made a thorough cure." No other remedy cures like "Catarrhozone" — try it for your next cold.

HIGH GRADE STRIKE.

Spokane, Wash., paper.

Wilmot M. Scott, of Spokane, interested in the burnt Hill and Ifecla mineral claims near Iron Mountain, Mont., arrived in the city Wednesday after visiting a number of friends he left for an inspection of the property the next day.

Some very high grade ore, assaying $3 per cent lead, 105.2 ounces of silver and $12.40 in gold, was struck in the Ifecla claim on the 300 foot level at a depth of about 40 feet.

A lower crosscut tunnel was run which encountered the vein when in a distance of 70 feet. At this point the vein has been drifted on for 135 feet and is now thoroughly impregnated with galena. It will yet require an additional 25 or 50 feet to get down the ore body discovered in the upper tunnel and will give a depth of approximately 150 feet. The claims lie about six miles northwest from an air line from Iron Mountain or eleven miles by wagon road.

The lease and bonding of Warsner recently bonded the western extension of these claims for $60,000. Negotiations for the bonding of Mr. Scott's holdings by the same parties fell through as they could not agree on terms and price.

His many friends in Napanee will be pleased to learn of Wilmot's success.

TOWN COUNCIL.

Council Chambers,
Monday, Oct. 2nd, 1905.

Council met in regular session, on Monday evening. Mayor Lowry presiding.

Members present — Councillors Ming, Mcrnile, Kimmerly, Graham, Williams and Simpson.

The Water, Light and Light committee reported that they had received word that the poles for the new electric light system were all landed on the dock, and would be delivered in a few days, and would likely arrive here the first of the week. The Edison Electric Co. would have the new power house ready to run it was claimed until Tuesday next, when the engineer had been engaged in town and looked over the work. He was quite pleased, and pronounced it very satisfactory. The committee recommended the purchasing of the electric light poles from the Standard Telephone Co., and the solicitor informed the Council that he was of the opinion that the by-law would be valuable. It was the second decision for two experts to look over the work, and the Council decided to purchase the poles.

Ex-Mayor Jamieson was heard, and asked that the Council grant the Methodist Episcopal church the grant of $100 for the year 1905, which was granted in 1904, but not in 1905, except for municipal purposes.

On motion the matter was left in the hands of the Town Property Committee to report.

A petition from the Police committee was read asking for Police Court to meet the Council on Wednesday evening, 11th inst.

The following accounts were ordered to be paid: Wm. Ellis, $2.50; Dominion Express Co., $1.00; Geo. Wright, $2.00; Geo. Wright, $2.00; Geo. Wright, $2

THE WITCH OF CRAGENSTONE

"From Sterndorf," he answered, with darkening face.

"Beshrew my heart! But this country must ha' been intended for wild beasts with claws instead of human beings with only hands and ponáirds. Our orders came to march at once across the footpath over the mountain, and such crawling, climbing, tearing and cutting our way none will ever know."

"Twas well when so weary that thou found the Sign of the Red Heart to rest at ere thou pursued the rest of thy journey," his companion observed quietly.

The captain glanced up quickly.

"Oh, we have reached our destination," he said. "We have business in this village on the morrow."

"I faith, a stranger just arrived, as I am, hath had little chance to hear of the happenings round about," La Fabienne observed carelessly. "But this sober peopled village looketh not like a warring center. Here, good fellow, finish thine ale," he cried as the officer, opening his mouth to speak, was about to ask him a question, "so I can offer thee some red wine that I have in yonder flagon on the table. So thou'rt not on thy way to join comrades?"

The captain finished his ale as directed, and the empty pewter tankard came down on the bench with a ringing sound.

"My business in the village," he said, lowering his voice and looking toward the door apprehensively, "hath a deal of secrecy about it, as my first and most important instructions were to hold converse with no one but the members of the council."

Sir Godfrey rose and, bringing the jug of wine, commenced to ply the man with liquor, laughing and jesting merrily as he did so.

At last the captain, who was very weary from his long day's march and whose face was red from excess of drinking, cried that he had had enough and must keep his senses, as he and his men were under orders to rise at daybreak.

"Us daggers!" he continued under his breath, with a drunken laugh. "An this witch escapes any other way than up the air astride a broomstick I lose the king's favor."

"Thy business here concerneth a witch?" his companion questioned carelessly.

The captain was hiccoughing slightly, and he reeled and almost fell as he tugged at his boot.

"Beshew me, yes. Such devil's work and devil's luck as hath been mine this day doth keep me cursing. Two long weeks we have been buried in Sterndorf, an' just as we were expecting instructions to go back to London we were ordered here to capture some old beldam who hath been doing serious pranks and stirring up devils in the community."

"An old woman?" La Fabienne looked up eagerly. "Hast thou her name, man?"

The captain fumbled among his papers and, drawing forth a sheet of parchment, spelled out with difficulty the name—"Margaret Mayland, accused by Josiah Taunston and Adam Bowdle," he read slowly.

"And so thou takest the witch at daybreak?" La Fabienne observed lightly. "What reason for such haste, good fellow?"

"I know not the reason of such haste, good sir. Diable! A soldier asks not reasons, but obeys orders."

La Fabienne yawned.

"Thy tale, forsooth, hath a touch of interest in it, friend, with a promise of excitement for the morrow," he said. "Hast not a similar document, captain? Of what portent is that?"

His companion took the tankard.

"This other paper?" The man lowered his voice. "Prithee, 'tis a warrant for the arrest and custody of some Frenchman she hath bewitched, or be an accomplice to the old hag in her devilment, I wot not which. My information is but vague."

He stretched out his arms and rubbed his eyes sleepily.

"Methinks he doth live with her at the house. Our orders, however, are to take the woman first."

The man, having loosed his tongue by his many and frequent potations, continued with an air of mysterious secrecy. "I' truth, I'd have no attempt to escape they will find that all the roads leading from the village are guarded."

"Ha! Is't so?"

La Fabienne's manner betrayed such ill-concealed astonishment and agitation that had his companion's senses not been dulled the fact would not have escaped his notice.

"Aye, comrade, by Puritans heavily armed and with orders to take them dead or alive. So, I ween, the poor devil's case hath not much of hope in it."

The American Girl.

WHAT MAKES HER POPULAR.

The American girl is admired and liked at home and abroad because she is the happiest, usually the healthiest and friendliest of girls. She is fond of life and is alive to everything beautiful and good in existence. Mrs. Langtry has said that the American woman has little to learn from her English sisters.

Dr. Pierce, the specialist in women's diseases, of Buffalo, N. Y., advises simple exercises for women, preferably in the out-door air. But many women are confined to the house and, their household duties or their business confines them to poorly ventilated rooms.

If a woman suffers from a headache, a backache, a sensation of irritability or twitching and uncomfortable nervousness, something must be wrong with the head or back, she naturally says, but all the time the real trouble very often centers in the womanly organs. In 98 per cent. of cases the seat of the difficulty is here, and a woman should take rational treatment for its cure. The local disorder and inflammation of the delicate special organs of the sex should be treated steadily and systematically.

Backed up by over a third of a century of remarkable and uniform cures, a record such as no other remedy for these diseases and weaknesses peculiar to women ever attained, the proprietors and makers of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription now feel fully warranted in offering to pay $500 for any case of Leucorrhœa, Female Weakness, Prolapsus, or Falling of Womb which they cannot cure. All they ask is a fair and reasonable trial of their means of cure.

By the uncertain light of the candle La Fabienne's face looked extremely white. His throat, suddenly, he untied the lace bow at his throat.

"Come, let's to bed, good captain. I must rise with the dawn!" he cried boisterously. "Methinks 'twere rare sport to see a witch taken. What punishment is meted out to such?"

"Sleath, hanging or burning," the other replied carelessly.

"Of a surety the king will interfere." La Fabienne's hand trembled as he unbuckled his sword.

"Nay!" the officer cried hastily. "Thou'rt wrong there, friend! The king bothers not his head with such small kind as dwell hereabout. Why, his majesty's as variable as a woman, going from one side to the other as often as the wind changeth, and now he's all for the papists, an' if there is a thing he is more against than another it is witchcraft. Pah, blood! At the last morning at Sterndorf the woman's brother appealed to him, and the king sent word back that they could all burn each other up for he so willed for aught he would interfere, and 'twould be a good riddance when 'twas over. He's changeable, but as a rule must cannot count on his not interfering at a witch burning."

"God's pity!" exclaimed La Fabienne under his breath, as he continued hastily: "Methought the man had grown more communicative. "The witch, methinks myself, 'twere well to capture, but how shall we know whom thou spokest, what want they of him?"

"It seemeth he hath great influence both at home and abroad," the captain whispered, looking furtively at the closed door. "If they can hold him safely in prison until the woman is tried and executed they will let him go, or maybap prefer charges against him and bring him to trial also."

He threw himself down wearily on the pallet of straw in the corner.

"Poor devil!" observed La Fabienne lightly. "But 'tis ever the way of those that consort with evil. Marry! The wretch is fairly caught in the trap these God fearing Puritans have set for him."

His companion grunted a sleepy response.

"If 'tis as thou hath stated, that all the roads are stoutly defended but the footpath through the mountain forest"—La Fabienne eyed the man narrowly—"the witch's accomplice, hap-pen he got wind of his intended arrest, hath small hope of escape."

The captain laughed a drunken laugh of enjoyment; then, raising up in bed on his elbow, he said:

"My lord, 'tis truth thou speakest. The man is fairly caught. But if the wretch had knowledge of the hardships my men and I have endured, we may be would prefer to believe that the people have in store for him to attempting escape through the forest. By blood and nails, it was an awful ordeal, an' but for the fact that it was as difficult to retrace our steps as to proceed, my fellows would have refused to advance. A curse on this cursed top notch of nowhere!" he cried. "Tomorrow, our work done, we march down yon mountain root to London, or I'm a Dutch if I'm a man and know not mine own will!"

As his companion did not reply or seem inclined to hold further converse, the captain stretched himself out on the pallet at full length and, throwing an arm up over his head, was soon sleeping soundly.

La Fabienne waited, making sure that the prostrate man was unconscious of all else but his dreams, then threw himself hopelessly into a chair and let the pent up feelings in his heart break through the quiet mask he had worn on his face, and an expression baffled and despairing took its place, while under his breath he cursed himself roundly for his stupid lack of foresight and his contempt for Josiah Taunston's plottings. Springing to his feet, he paced lightly up and down the room like one bereft. Once he paused at the aperture and looked out over the darkness of the Mayland farm, the tops of the tall trees in the forest being all that was visible, then strode fiercely across the room and back, his pale lips contain his emotions. Unlocking a chest that stood in the corner, he removed from it to his person a bag of gold and a brace of pistols, put on his hat and cape and noiselessly buckled on his sword.

"If I allowed her to attempt the forest she would die," he said under his breath, "and if I told her of my intention she would not let me go alone.

Oh, God, 'tis hard!" He shook his head hopelessly.

The candle, now burned down to the edge of the socket, threw weird, smoky rays on La Fabienne's white face as he seated himself, in great perplexity and sore distress, upon the wooden bench.

"Margaret, oh, my love! God help me! There is no other way," he said after a few moments' consideration, and as his hand fell forward upon his hands the candle near him sputtered and went out as if in very sympathy for his sorrow and despair. Rising, he groped his way to the door, down the stairway and out of the house so silently that no one, not even the innkeeper, sleeping in his chair by the chimney place, heard him or knew that he had gone.

CHAPTER XXII.

THE next morning at the earliest hour of dawn, before even the birds had wakened, when the only light on the earth was that received from the rising sun's reflection on the sky, Margaret Mayland, dressed in her riding habit of crimson cloth, moved about the house, busily making her preparations for departure.

"'Tis strange, Elsbeth," she said as she finished fastening a large, square locker, "that Gaston is not here. Hath thou the saddlebags packed? Methinks by now the horses should be fed and in readiness for our journey."

Elsbeth drew her breath sharply.

"Twill be a glad hour when thou an' I are far away from this domain," she said. "Since we came here, sweet, I ha' been defiant, ever scornful o' the sneers of the people and their sinister glances, but this morning I woke from my fitful sleeping with terror in my heart and a dreadful fear that these villagers, led by thy cousin, would seek to take their hatred and intolerant vengeance on thee."

Margaret patted the older woman's shoulder reassuringly.

"Thou'rt overworked, Elsbeth, and hath the megrims as a consequence," she said. "Why take on so? We have a strong protector so close at hand? Hast thou yet to learn, foolish old woman, that Sir Godfrey is a man to put dependents on? Last night when he left me he said, 'Trust me, Margaret,' and he needed not mine assurance to know that I did so with all my heart."

Elsbeth walked to the window, looking out anxiously toward the village.

"The hour of dawn is full upon us," she said solemnly, "an' neither thy lover nor his servant is approaching. Happen he meant the morrow, sweet?"

Margaret frowned impatiently.

"Godfrey said this morning at daybreak, and he did not mean any other time," she said crossly. "Of a surety, La Fabienne would ne'er break his word to any one, much less to the woman he loves. See, Elsbeth," she cried a moment later, "the sun is only just above the mountain tops. 'Tis but now the break of day! They'll come anon!"

The women moved about, completing their arrangements in silence, and from time to time pausing in their labors to listen for sounds of approaching horses' feet. Suddenly Elsbeth clutched her companion's arm.

"Hist!" she whispered. "What strange sounds fall on mine ears! Dost not hear a muffled calling an' the tramp of many feet?"

Both hastened to an aperture in the hallway that commanded a better view of the road and the village, and there they looked on with beating hearts; then Margaret, uttering a groan, cowered against the wall, covering up her face with her hands.

"Oh, God's pity! If Godfrey hath met my cousin Josiah and in his just anger hath killed him!" she cried.

The other stood looking out of the window hopelessly.

"Elsbeth, say that thou doth see my Godfrey riding this way unmolested!" Margaret cried tearfully.

"I see thy cousin Josiah, an' methinks 'tis the old elder who is the judge or superior in the council on horseback advancing toward this house," Elsbeth announced dully, "an' a party of soldiery surrounding by a throng of excited people do follow them. They are turning in this gateway, Margaret" the woman fairly shrieked as she turned toward her the arms about her young mistress. "Hide, sweet; mayhap 'tis thee they want. Bolt the doors an' bar the windows! Refuse them admittance!"

Margaret's face was white and startled.

"Elsbeth, calm thyself. Cease thy maunderings," she answered sternly. "I hide! Margaret Mayland hide her face, as though she had done wrong! Shame on thee, Elsbeth! Rather bid me throw open wide the door."

"Margaret, sweet babe Margaret," the old woman cried, almost beside herself with fear and apprehension, "then take off the cross thou wearest that doth anger them."

At these words Margaret raised her head haughtily and drew away from the woman, but Elsbeth clung to her wildly.

"Remember that I have loved thee so that thou hast ne'er missed thy mother!" she cried. "Thou hast told me so, sweet, many times when 'twas thy mood to be tender. Margaret, for the care I have given thee I demand a return. Take off the cross that doth anger them!"

The noises outside came nearer, growing louder. Margaret stooped and kissed the sobbing woman on the forehead.

"And have I not loved thee, too, Elsbeth?" she asked as she pushed her gently from her.

Heavy trampling on the steps was heard, then a loud rapping on the door. Margaret's eyes gleamed strangely.

"Go, Elsbeth, throw open wide the door," she said. "Bid our visitors enter."

"Nay, nay, Margaret, I cannot go!" Elsbeth crouched down in the corner on a chair, trembling as with a fit of ague.

"Open, in the king's name!" It was a man's voice shouting. Then he knocked again louder, this time with his sword hilt. Scarce had he ceased when the door was swung back on its hinges, and a young woman, more beautiful than he had ever seen before, with long skirts of red cloth trailing about her and the rose tinted rays of the early morning sun falling on her yellow hair and showing the dazzling whiteness of her skin, stood before him on the threshold and gazed at him, her head over his shoulder at the soldiers and throng of curious, excited people with quiet severity.

"Who knocks so rudely at my door and doth bid me open?" she said.

The captain of the guard, who had his papers in his hand, looked about him uncertainly; then a gleam of ardent admiration came into his eyes, and he advanced toward Margaret, pulling his hat off to the ground, with profuse bows. The soldiers at attention awaited orders, and the crowd, whose crying and hooting had sunk to low murmurs of curious interest as the startling sound of the officer's loud rapping fell on their ears, now at the sight of the mistress of Mayland began to gesticulate wildly, pointing in her direction and calling loudly: "'Tis she, the witch! The devil's beldame! Take her, good officer, an' thou'lt be doing God's work!"

As she saw the menacing actions and heard the angry accusations of the people the pallor on Margaret's face deepened, and she trembled slightly from shock and surprise.

Then, collecting herself with a mighty effort, she spoke again to the officer:

"What duty brings thee to my door, good captain?"

The captain, squaring his shoulders, strutted before her conceitedly, then said in pleasant tones, with an insinuating smile of admiration, "I am profuse that fair lady, by order of the king, to take into custody the person"—here he paused to look over the scroll of parchment he held in his hand—"of a woman, one Margaret Mayland, accused of the crime of witchcraft."

At that moment old Elsbeth appeared in the doorway behind Margaret, her befrilled cap awry and her eyes red with weeping. The captain, observing her, made another low bow to Margaret.

"With your permission I will enter and take her now," he said. "Men, forward!"

The soldiers, with swords clanking, came up the steps. Margaret did not move, for, having caught sight of her cousin, Josiah Taunston, grim, exultant, solemn, astride his high horse in the middle of the gathering, she was gazing at him with an expression of reproachful sternness.

"Grievous mistress"—the captain laid his hand upon her arm—"it will be necessary for me to take this woman. In the king's name I ask thee to allow me to enter."

She drew away from his touch with a quick gesture of offended dignity.

"Why shouldst thou enter, man, when she whom thou hast come to take stands at thy side?" she said.

"Thou, mistress?"

The captain fell back a step or two in his surprise.

"'Tis no wonder that thou doth stare at me incredulous, with open mouth," she said bitterly. "Yea, I am Margaret Mayland, and a woman most unjustly accused."

"Prithee, captain," cried Elder Williams, the chief councilor, who had been whispering aside with Taunston, "do thy duty with more speed. Happen then may longer thou'lt fall under the spell of the woman, and, instead of performing the king's work, thou'lt be doing pranks on the green! More haste, officer."

Thus sternly admonished, the captain replaced his helmet and, motioning to his men to come closer, said: "Margaret Mayland, in the king's name I do arrest thee for the black crimes of witchcraft and connivance with the devil. I am under orders to see thee safely in a cell in the town prison, there to await trial for these charges, and it is my duty to command thee to come with me now."

The captain spoke Margaret listened immovable, with pale face and flashing eyes, and when he had finished, as if she could no longer restrain her indignation at the outrageous injustice, brushed him aside with a sweeping gesture of her hand and, striking through the soldiers to the top of the steps, stood looking defiantly at the concourse of people before her. The sun, now higher and brighter in the heavens, fell upon her warmly, and the gold cross on her bosom gleamed brightly in its rays.

"Ignorant churls! Ingrates! Poltroons!" she cried, with scornful anger. "Dost know 'tis Margaret Mayland that ye do attack? Cowards, to bring a band of soldiery to take one weak woman captive! But know now and think well before ye act that the woman whom ye do accuse is not defenseless, her bath a strong protector close at hand in the person of Sir Godfrey La Fabienne!"

Here she was interrupted by much derisive hooting and the loud shouts and laughter of the crowd. Disregarding the disturbance, she continued:

"Here me now well, then, and heed, for I warn ye that a punishment

"Why shouldst thou enter, man?"

brought to bear by powerful influence at two courts will be dealt out to those who seek to injure me! Ignorant, deceived people that ye are, canst not see that ye are led by the greed and vengeance of Josiah Taunston?"

Here she threw out her arm and pointed her finger in his direction, continuing distinctly, "Mine own cousin, who doth seek to injure me because I would not wed with him and make him the master of the Mayland farm!"

"'Tis false!" thundered Taunston. "Shut the screeching wench's mouth!"

"Heed while there is yet time and disperse," Margaret cried, seeing not to notice his interruption, "for I do assure ye that for every insult put upon me a head will answer for it!"

Elsbeth, who had been sobbing in the doorway, frantic with fear, now ran to Margaret and, throwing her arms about her, cried entreatingly: "Hush her, sweet, hush her! Twill only anger them the more. These good folk have naught against thee; 'tis thy gold cross that they dislike. Take off and burn it before them all, an' they will go their way, leaving thee unmolested, I'll warrant thee, babe."

The distressed old woman looked toward the throng of stern, unyielding faces entreatingly, but their only response to her appeal was the loud cry of "The cross, Satan's demon dealing charm! The cross! The cross!"

The turbulent crowd surged nearer, and one woman, more excited than the others, sprang at Margaret, making a snatch at the cross as though to tear it off. In a second the handle of Josiah Taunston's riding whip fell on her shoulder heavily.

"Fool!" he said under his breath, directing a dark look at her. "Wouldst thou destroy the evidence?"

The woman, greatly abashed, fell back among the crowd.

The mistress of Mayland farm, with flashing eyes, put her hand over the cross protectingly, and she pushed her old nurse from her with firm determination, saying: "Elsbeth, my words do all my heart with shame. A Mayland asked to do the bidding of these village churls! Margaret Mayland to be told what to wear and what not to wear by these ignorant, prejudiced people! I have done no wrong. My cross contains no evil!"

As a full sense of the wrongful injustice from which she was suffering swept over her Margaret turned upon the crowd of accusers again, this time more furiously.

"This cross I wear, no man can touch it while I live!" she cried. "And as ye have thought it seemly to brand me as a witch and bring soldiers here to arrest me, I do defy ye and do warn ye not to lay hands on me until ye have first notified my affianced husband, Sir Godfrey La Fabienne, of thine intention!"

Jeers, ejaculations of derision and contempt, also loud, scornful laughter, followed Margaret's words.

"Sir Godfrey La Fabienne!" shrieked one woman shrilly. "Ha, ha! She doth command us to notify her white livered lover! Ho, ho!"

With a proud, hopeless gesture of her hand the unfortunate woman turned from the crowd of sneering, sinister faces before her and, addressing the captain of the guard, who stood close at her side, said entreatingly, "Good captain, wilt thou not send notice of this outrage to my friend, Sir Godfrey La Fabienne, who for some good reason hath been detained at yonder tavern by the mill stream, the Sign of the Red Heart?"

"One moment, mistress." The captain stepped down and, going to Josiah Taunston, appeared to be consulting him, the concourse of people, now grown silent, watching with bated breath. Suddenly Taunston threw up his head and let forth a harsh, unmirthful shout of laughter.

"Cannot send a message to her lover?" he cried in a loud voice of triumph. "Nay, man, thou cannot, for the dastard hath run away, and no man knoweth whither!"

With angry glances from her flashing eyes Margaret turned upon him.

"Josiah Taunston"—the words came slowly and distinctly from the pale lips—"the truth is not on thy lips, and I tell thee that thou lieth. And heed thee how loudly thou doth speak, for the man liveth not long who doth call Sir Godfrey La Fabienne dastard!"

Taunston rode a few paces closer to the steps and before the throng of citizens men and women, who were now crowding on the green in wild enjoyment of their knowledge of her lover's departure and of Margaret's speedy discomfiture, the cousins, the accuser and accused, were face to face.

"Wanton! Witch! Thing of evil!" he said in a low, menacing voice. "Hear the truth from the lips of one who e'er speaks truth! Thy lover, thy beauteous, honorable, noble lover, who did talk so bravely to win thy favors, hath at the first sign of trouble run away I' the night."

"'Tis not true!" Margaret cried, with set face and gleaming eyes. "I call thee here before all listeners a speaker of untruths and do brand thee as a liar!"

"Ho, ho!" Taunston turned and addressed the chief councilor, who had come closer, with expressions of triumph in his voice and on his face. "The witch liketh not the news we bring her and refuseth to believe that her courtly lover disappeared i' the night—deserted her in her hour of need."

"Mistress Mayland," Elder Williams said sternly, "what Josiah Taunston saith is true. La Fabienne went away last night; no man knoweth whither. Fourfold too much time hath been wasted in thy foolish parleying. Officer, do thy duty."

The captain had not time to open his mouth to give the order when Margaret, springing down the steps, grasped the bridle rein of the chief councilor's horse.

"One moment, good sir. I ask for a short reprieve while some one whom I can trust doth go to the Sign of the Red Heart for Sir Godfrey. Those who know him not, who understand not his fine sense of honor, may think that he hath taken alarm and deserted me, but"—here she raised her eyes, gazing passionately into his face—"I know better; I know that he doth remain close at hand to rescue me or to give me comfort."

She swayed slightly, and the captain, touched with a feeling of pity, caught her by the arm to steady her.

"Is there no man here who can give the damsel proper confirmation of the news we bring?" he said gruffly.

At that moment Margaret gave a piercing shriek of joy, for Gaston, with bowed head and walking slowly, was just entering the gateway. All eyes were turned in his direction, and there was no sound from the people as he approached and knelt humbly at Margaret's feet.

"Rise, Gaston," she cried in joyful tones, "and give the message that thou dost bring from thy master. Speak loudly, so that all his wicked tongued accusers may hear and know the wrong that they have done him."

The fellow did not lift his head.

"Speak, good Gaston."

"Fair mistress," he said in thick, muffled tones, "my lord left last night."

The glow of color that had swept over Margaret's face at Gaston's appearance faded away.

"Whither went he?"

"I know not, mistress."

"Rise, stupid," she commanded, with quick impatience, "and speak the message that Sir Godfrey left for me. What good reason for his going gave he, and what tender words of counsel for me?"

The fellow rose, but did not meet her glance. He stood with bowed head, shifting his feet nervously.

"Mistress, I will never speak?" Margaret shook his arm angrily.

"Good Mistress Mayland," the man stammered, "I—I have but one word for you from my master"—

"And that is?" she interrupted almost wildly in her desperation.

"Farewell."

Margaret fell back as if she had received a blow in the face, and the listening crowd closed in around them, with gloating looks and taunting words, wild with triumphant excitement. The captain laid his hand on her arm determinedly, but she threw him off and, clinging to Gaston, besought him to tell her more.

"Kind mistress," he said, "last night at about an hour after midnight, when I was sleeping heavily on a pile of straw in the stable. I felt some one touching me gently and, springing up in surprise, found my master bending over me. As I attempted to speak he put his hand over my mouth and whispered these words:

"'Gaston, positive news hath reached me that at the rising of the sun I and Mistress Mayland are to be taken into custody by the soldiers who arrived here tonight and thrown into prison. As all the passes are strongly guarded we cannot escape by'—

"At that instant the man sleeping at my side wakened and raised on his elbow. My master, hardly daring to breathe, crouched lower in the shadow, so that he was unperceived.

"'Much more would I say,' he whispered, 'but I cannot take the risk. Tell Mistress Mayland farewell and'—

"Just then another fellow stirred, and, rousing his companion, the men exchanged words, listening. Breathless we waited until the soldiers were breathing regularly again. Then my lord, giving my hand a strong pressure, took the door, crept silently and slipped noiselessly through the doorway."

"Swear what thou sayst is the truth!" Margaret cried, now standing erect before him, a deathlike pallor on her countenance.

"By the sacred memory of my mother's love I swear it!" Gaston said solemnly.

The proud head of the mistress of the Mayland farm, its covering of yellow hair gleaming in the sunlight, fell forward on her breast. The captain to hide his emotion gave a loud order, and the soldiers, with noise of clanking swords, closed in around her.

Margaret looked about her in a dazed manner.

"There is no need of force," she said dully. "I will go with thee."

The noise from the clamoring, shouting mass of people was almost deafening as the officer, leading Margaret, bareheaded and the long skirts of her riding habit trailing after her on the ground, started toward the roadway.

"To the jail! To the jail!" they cried frantically.

"The witch doth hang her head in shame of her evil deeds," said one woman, running along with a child in her arms.

"Nay," cried another. "'Tis with sorrow that her poltroon lover hath deserted her. Such kind know not shame!"

At the gateway the captain called a halt, as he wished to consult Josiah Taunston on some matter pertaining to his orders, and Elsbeth, who had been running after them in fearful agony, wringing her hands and screaming shrilly, fell at Margaret's feet and threw her arms about her in hopeless abandon.

"Oh, sweet babe, bonny Margaret," she moaned, "they are taking thee to prison, where I shall never see thee more! Can naught be done to save thee? Ah, lackaday, God's mercy on us all! They'll kill thee and no help comes."

"Grieve not, Elsbeth," Margaret an-

THE WITCH OF CRAGENSTONE

"From Sterndorf," he answered, with darkening face.

"Beshrew my heart! But this country must ha' been intended for wild beasts with claws instead of human beings with only hands and poniards. Our orders came to march at once across the footpath over the mountain, and such crawling, climbing, tearing and cutting our way none will ever know."

"Twas well when so weary that thou found the Sign of the Red Heart to rest at ere thou pursued the rest of thy journey," his companion observed quietly.

The captain glanced up quickly.

"Oh, we have reached our destination," he said. "We have business in this village on the morrow."

"I' faith, a stranger just arrived, as I am, hath little chance to hear of the happenings round about," La Fabienne observed carelessly. "But this sober peopled village looketh not like a warring center. Here, good fellow, finish thine ale," he cried as the officer, opening his mouth to speak, was about to ask him a question, "and bring another thee some red wine. We have in yonder flagon on the table. So thou'rt not on thy way to join comrades?"

The captain finished his ale as directed, and the empty pewter tankard came down on the bench with a ringing sound.

"My business in the village," he said, lowering his voice and looking toward the door apprehensively, "hath a deal of secrecy about it, as my first and most important instructions were to hold converse with no one but the members of the council."

Sir Godfrey rose and, bringing the jug of wine, commenced to ply the man with liquor, laughing and jesting merrily as he did so.

At last the captain, who was very weary from his long day's march and whose face was red from excess of drinking, cried that he had drunk enough and must keep his senses, as he and his men were under orders to rise at daybreak.

"Ods daggers!" he continued under his breath, with a drunken laugh. "An the witch escapes any other way than up the air astride a broomstick I lose the king's favor."

"Thy business here concerneth a witch?" his companion questioned carelessly.

The captain was hiccoughing slightly, and he reeled and almost fell as he tugged at his boot.

"Beshrew me, yes. Such devil's work and devil's luck as hath been mine this day doth keep me cursing. Two long weeks we have been buried in Sterndorf, an' just as we were expecting instructions to go back to London we were ordered here to capture some old beldam who hath been doing serious pranks and stirring up devils in the community."

"An old woman?" La Fabienne looked up eagerly. "Hast thou her name, man?"

The captain fumbled among his papers and, drawing forth a sheet of parchment, spelled out with difficulty the name—"Margaret Mayland, accused by Josiah Taunston and Adam Browdie," he read slowly.

"And so thou takest the witch at daybreak?" La Fabienne observed lightly. "What reason for such haste, good fellow?"

"I know not the reason of such haste, good sir. Diable! A soldier asks not reasons, but obeys orders."

La Fabienne yawned.

"Thy tale, forsooth, hath a touch of interest in it, friend, with a promise of excitement for the morrow," he said. "Hast not a similar document, captain? Of what portent is that?"

His companion took the tankard.

"This other paper?" The man lowered his voice. "Prithee, 'tis a warrant for the arrest and custody of some Frenchman she hath bewitched, or is an accomplice to the old hag in her bewitchment, I wot not which. My information is but vague."

He stretched out his arms and rubbed his eyes sleepily.

"Methinks he doth live with her at the house. Our orders, however, are to take the woman first."

The soldier, having loosed his tongue by his many and frequent potations, continued with an air of mysterious secrecy. "I' faith, if they attempt to escape they will find that all the ways leading from the village are guarded."

"Ha! Is't so?"

La Fabienne's manner betrayed such ill-concealed astonishment and agitation that had his companion's senses not been dulled the fact would not have escaped his notice.

"Aye, truly, by Puritans heavily armed and with orders to take them dead or alive. So, I ween, the poor devils' case hath not much of hope in it."

The American Girl.

WHAT MAKES HER POPULAR.

The American girl is admired and liked at home and abroad because she is the happiest, usually the healthiest and friendliest of girls. She is fond of life and is alive to everything beautiful and good in existence. Mrs. Langtry has said that the American woman has little to learn from her English sisters.

Dr. Pierce, the specialist in women's diseases, of Buffalo, N. Y., advises simple exercises for women, preferably in the open door air. But many women are confined to the house and their household duties or their business confines them to poorly ventilated rooms.

If a woman suffers from a headache, a backache, a sensation of irritability or twitching and uncontrollable nervousness, something must be wrong with the head or back, she naturally says, but all the time the real trouble very often centers in the womanly organs. In 98 per cent. of cases the seat of the difficulty is here, and a woman should take rational treatment for this cure. The local disorder and inflammation of the delicate special organs of the sex should be treated steadily and systematically.

Backed up by over a third of a century of remarkable and uniform cures, a record such as no other remedy for the diseases and weaknesses peculiar to women, ever attained, the proprietors and makers of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription now feel fully warranted in offering to pay $500 for any case of Leucorrhea, Female Weakness, Prolapsus, or Falling of Womb which they cannot cure. All they ask is a fair and reasonable trial of their means of cure.

By the uncertain light of the candle La Fabienne's face looked extremely white. Rising suddenly, he untied the lace bow at his throat.

"Come, let's to bed, good captain. I must rise with thee at the dawn!" he cried boisterously. "Methinks I've rare sport to see a witch taken. What punishment is meted out to such?"

"Sdeath, hanging or burning," the other replied carelessly.

"Of a surety the king will interfere," La Fabienne's hand trembled as he unbuckled his sword.

"Nay!" the officer cried hastily. "Thou'rt wrong there, friend! The king bothers not his head with such small plant as dwell beneath us. Why, his majesty's as variable as a woman, going from one side to the other as often as the wind chilligeth. Just now he's all for the papists, there is a thing he is more against than another it is witchcraft. 'Ods blood! At the last burning at Sterndorf the woman's brother appealed to him, and the king sent word back that they could all burn each other up an they so willed for aught he cared. Why, his wife, and 'twould be a good riddance when 'twas over. He's changeable, but as a rule thou canst count on his not interfering at a witch burning."

"God's pity!" exclaimed La Fabienne under his breath. Then he continued hastily, whereas the man had grown more communicative, "The witch, methinks myself, 'twere well to capture, but the Frenchman of whom thou spoken, what of him, good sir?"

"It seemeth he hath great influence both at home and abroad," the captain whispered, looking furtively at the closed door. "If they can hold him safely in prison until the woman is tried and executed they will let him go, or mayhap interfere against him and bring him to trial also."

He threw himself down wearily on the pallet of straw in the corner.

"Your devil!" observed La Fabienne lightly. "But 'tis ever the way of those that consort with evil. Marry! The wretch is fairly caught in the trap these God fearing Puritans have set for him."

His companion grunted a sleepy response.

"If 'tis as thou hath stated, that all the roads are stoutly defended but the footpath through the mountain forest"—La Fabienne spoke the man unbrowly—"the witch's accomplice, happen he got wind of his intended arrest, hath small hope of escape."

The captain laughed a drunken laugh of enjoyment; then, raising up in bed on his elbow, he said:

"My lord, 'tis truth thou speakest. The man is fairly caught. But if the wretch had knowledge of the hardships my men and I have endured today he would prefer the hanging that the people have in store for him to attempting escape through the forest. By blood and nails, it was an awful ordeal, an' but for the fact that it was as difficult to retrace our steps as to proceed, my fellows would have refused to advance. A curse on this scraggy top nobody nowhere!" he cried. "Tomorrow, our work done, we march down yon mountain road to London, or I'm but half a man and know not mine own will!"

As his companion did not reply or seem inclined to hold further converse, the captain stretched himself out on the pallet at full length and, throwing an arm up over his head, was soon sleeping soundly.

La Fabienne waited, making sure that the prostrate man was unconscious of all else but his dreams, then threw himself hopelessly into a chair and let the pent up feelings in his heart break through the quiet mask he had worn on his face, and an expression baffled and desperate took its place, while under his breath he cursed himself roundly for his stupid lack of foresight and his contempt for Josiah Taunston's plotting. Springing to his feet, he paced lightly up and down the room like one bereft. Once he paused at the aperture and looked long in the direction of the forest, but the dark tops of the tall trees in the forest being all that was visible, then strode fiercely across the room again as if unable to contain himself longer. Unlocking a chest that stood in the corner, he removed from it to his person a bag of gold and a brace of pistols, put on his hat and cape and noiselessly buckled on his sword.

"If I allowed her to attempt the forest she would die," he said under his breath, "and if I told her of my intention she would not let me go alone. Oh, God, 'tis hard!" He shook his head hopelessly.

The candle, now burned down to the edge of the socket, threw weird, smoky rays on La Fabienne's white face as he seated himself, in fresh perplexity and sore distress, upon the wooden bench.

"Margaret, oh, my love! God help me! There is no other way," he said after a few moments' consideration, and as his bent head fell forward on his hands the candle's rays shone spluttered and went out as if in very sympathy for his sorrow and despair. Rising, he groped his way in the dark, down the stairway and out of the house so silently that no one, not even the innkeeper, sleeping in his chair by the dimmer place, heard him or knew that he had gone.

CHAPTER XXII.

THE next morning at the earliest hour of dawn, before even the birds had wakened, when the only light on the earth was that received from the rising sun's reflection on the sky, Margaret Mayland, dressed in her riding habit of crimson cloth, moved about the house, busily making her preparations for departure.

"'Tis strange, Elsbeth," she said as she finished fastening a large, square locker, "that Gaston is not here. Hath thou the saddlebags packed? Methinks by now the horses should be fed and in readiness for our journey."

Elsbeth drew her breath sharply.

"'Twill be a glad hour when thou an' I are far away from this domain," she at last replied. "Since we came here, sweet, I ha' been defiant, ever scornful o' the sneers of the people and their sinister glances, but this morning I woke from my sleep sleeping with terror in my heart and a dreadful fear that these villagers, led by thy cousin, would seek to wreak their hatred and intolerant vengeance on thee."

Margaret patted the older woman's shoulder reassuringly.

"Thou'rt overworked, Elsbeth, and hath the megrims as a consequence," she said. "Why talk of fear when we have a strong protector to our hand? Hast thou yet to learn, foolish old woman, that Sir Godfrey is a man to put dependence on? Last night when he left me he said, 'Trust me, Margaret,' and he needed not mine assurance to know that I did so with all my heart."

Elsbeth walked to the window, looking out anxiously toward the village.

"The hour of dawn is fa' upon us," she said solemnly, "an' neither Sir Godfrey nor his servant is approaching. Happen he meant the morrow, sweet?"

Margaret frowned impatiently.

"Godfrey said this morning at daybreak, and he did not mean any other time," she said crossly. "Mark me, a La Fabienne would never break his word to any one, much less to the woman he loves. See, Elsbeth," she cried a moment later, "the sun is only just above the mountain tops. 'Tis but now the break of day! They'll come anon!"

The women moved about, completing their arrangements with nervous haste, from time to time pausing to listen to labors to listen for sounds of approaching horses' feet. Suddenly Elsbeth clutched her companion's arm.

"Hist!" she whispered. "What strange sounds fall on mine ears! Dost not hear voices loud calling an' the tramp of horses' feet?"

Both hastened to an aperture in the hallway that commanded a better view of the road and gates. For a moment they looked on with beating hearts; then Margaret, uttering a groan, cowered against the wall, covering up her face with her hands.

"Oh, God's pity! If Godfrey hath met my cousin Josiah and in his just anger hath killed him!" she moaned.

The other stood looking out of the window hopelessly.

"Elsbeth, say that thou doth see my Godfrey riding there unmolested!" Margaret cried tearfully.

"I see thy cousin Josiah, an' methinks 'tis the old elder who is the judge or superior in the council on horseback advancing toward this house," Elsbeth announced dully, "an' a party of soldiery surrounded by a throng of excited people do follow them. They are turning in this gateway, Margaret!" the woman fairly shrieked as she turned and threw her arms about her young mistress. "Hide, sweet; mayhap 'tis thee they want. Bolt the doors an' bar the windows! Refuse them admittance!"

Margaret's face was white and startled.

"Elsbeth, calm thyself. Cease thy maunderings," she answered sternly. "I bide! Margaret Mayland hide her face as though she had done wrong! Shame on thee, Elsbeth! Rather bid me throw open wide the door!"

"Margaret, sweet babe Margaret," the old woman cried, almost beside herself with fear and apprehension, "then take kif the cross thou wearest that doth anger them."

At these words Margaret raised her head haughtily and drew away from the woman, but Elsbeth clung to her wildly.

"Remember that I have loved thee as no other than mother's she cried. "Thou hast told me so, sweet, many times when 'twas thy mood to be tender. Margaret, for the sake I have given thee I demand a return. Take off the cross that doth anger them!"

The noises outside came nearer, growing louder. Margaret stooped and kissed the sobbing woman on the forehead.

"And have I not loved thee, too, Elsbeth?" she asked as she pushed her gently from her.

Heavy tramping on the steps was heard, then a loud rapping on the door. Margaret's eyes gleamed strangely.

"Go, Elsbeth, throw open wide the door," she said. "Bid our visitors enter."

"Nay, nay, Margaret, I cannot go!" Elsbeth crouched down in the corner on a chair, trembling as with a fit of ague.

"Open, in the king's name!" It was a man's voice shouting. Then he knocked again louder, this time with his sword hilt. Scarce had he ceased when the door was swung back on its hinges, and a young woman, more beautiful than he had ever seen before, with long skirts of red cloth trailing about her and the rose tinted rays of the early morning sun falling on her yellow hair and showing the dazzling whiteness of her skin, stood before him on the threshold and gazed at him, then over his shoulder at the soldiers all throng of curious, excited people with quiet severity.

"Who knocks so rudely at my door and doth bid me open?" she said.

The captain of the guard, who had his papers in his hand, looked about him uncertainly; then a gleam of admiration came into his eyes, and he advanced toward Margaret, pulling his hat off to the ground, with profuse bows. The soldiers at attention awaited orders, and the crowd, whose crying and hooting had sunk to low murmurs of curious interest at the startling sound of the officer's loud rapping fell on their ears, now at the sight of the mistress of Mayland farm began to gesticulate wildly, pointing in her direction and calling loudly: "'Tis she, the witch! The devil's beldame! Take her, good officer, an' thou'lt be doing God's work!"

As she saw the menacing actions and heard the angry accusations of the crowd the pallor on Margaret's face deepened, and she trembled slightly from shock and surprise.

Then, collecting herself with a mighty effort, she spoke again to the officer:

"What duty brings thee to my door, good captain?"

The captain, squaring his shoulders and retreated before her concededly, then said in pleasant tones, with an insinuating smile of admiration, "I am commanded, fair lady, by order of the king, to take into custody the person"—here he paused to look over the scroll of parchment he held in his hand—"of a woman, one Margaret Mayland, accused of the crime of witchcraft."

At that moment old Elsbeth appeared in the doorway behind Margaret, her bent head cap awry and her eyes red with weeping. The captain, observing her, made another low bow to Margaret.

"With your permission I will enter and take her now," he said. "Men, forward!"

The soldiers, with swords clanking, came up the steps. Margaret did not move, for, having caught sight of her cousin, Josiah Taunston, grim, exultant, solemn, astride his high horse in the middle of the gathering, she was gazing at him with an expression of reproachful sternness.

"Gracious mistress"—the captain laid his hand upon her arm—"it will be necessary for me to take this woman. In the king's name I ask thee to allow me to enter."

She drew away from his touch with a quick gesture of offended dignity.

"Why shouldst thou enter, man, when she whom thou hast come to take stands at thy side?" she said.

"Thou, mistress?"

The captain fell back a step or two in his surprise.

"'Tis no wonder that thou doth stare at me incredulous, with open mouth," she said, bitterly. "Yea, I am Margaret Mayland, and a woman most unjustly accused."

"Prithee, captain," cried Elder Williams, the chief councilor, who had been whispering aside with Taunston, "do thy duty with more speed. Happen thou stay longer thou'lt fall under the spell of the woman, and, instead of performing the king's work, thou'lt be doing pranks on the green! More haste, officer."

Thus sternly admonished, the captain replaced his helmet and, motioning to his men to come closer, said: "Margaret Mayland, in the king's name I do arrest thee for the black crimes of witchcraft and connivance with the devil. I am under orders to see thee safely in a cell in the town prison, there to await trial for these charges, and it is my duty to command thee to come with me now."

As the captain spoke Margaret listened immovable, with pale face and flashing eyes, and when he had finished, as if she could no longer restrain her indignation at the outrageous injustice, brushed him aside with a sweeping gesture of her hand and, walking through the soldiers to the top of the steps, stood looking defiantly at the concourse of people before her. The sun, now higher and brighter in the heavens, fell upon her warmly, and the gold cross on her bosom gleamed brightly in its rays.

"Ignorant churls! Ingrates! Foltroons!" she cried, with scornful anger. "Dost know 'tis Margaret Mayland that ye do attack? Cowards, to bring a band of soldiery to take one weak woman captive! But know now and think well before ye act that the woman whom ye do accuse is not defenseless, but hath a strong protector close at hand in the person of Sir Godfrey La Fabienne!"

Here she was interrupted by much derisive hooting and the loud shouts and laughter of the crowd. Disregarding the disturbance, she continued:

"Mark me well, then, and beware, for I warn ye that a punishment brought to bear by powerful influence at two courts will be dealt out to those who seek to injure me! Ignorant, deceived people that ye are, canst not see that ye are led by the greed and vengeance of Josiah Taunston?"

Here she threw out her arm and pointed her finger in his direction, continuing distinctly, "Mine own cousin, who doth seek to injure me because I would not wed with him and make him the master of the Mayland farm!"

"'Tis false!" thundered Taunston. "Shut the screeching wench's mouth!"

"Heed ye'll me there is yet time and disperse," Margaret cried, seeming not to notice his interruption, "for I do assure ye that for every insult put upon me a head will answer for it!"

Elsbeth, who had been sobbing in the doorway, frantic with fear, now ran to Margaret and, throwing her arms about her, cried entreatingly: "Hush thy harsh words, sweet. 'Twill only anger them. Look, look! The good folk have naught against thee; 'tis thy gold cross that they mislike. Take it off and burn it before them all, and they will go their way, leaving thee unmolested, I'll warrant thee, babe."

The distressed old woman looked toward the throng of stern, unyielding faces entreatingly, but their only response to her appeal was the loud cry of "The cross, Satan's death dealing charm! The cross! The cross!"

The turbulent crowd surged nearer, and one woman, more excited than the others, sprang at Margaret, making a snatch at the cross as though to tear it off. In a second the hands of Josiah Taunston's riding whip fell on her shoulder.

"Fool!" he said under his breath, directing a dark look at her. "Wouldst thou destroy the evidence?"

The woman, greatly abashed, fell back among the crowd.

The mistress of Mayland farm, with flashing eyes, put her hand over the cross protectingly, and she pushed her old nurse from her with firm determination, saying: "Elsbeth, thy words do but try my patience. A Mayland asked to do the bidding of these village churls! Margaret Mayland to be told what to wear and what not to wear by these ignorant, prejudiced people! I have done no wrong. My cross contains no evil!"

As a full sense of the wrongful injustice from which she was suffering swept over her Margaret turned upon the crowd of accusers again, this time more furiously.

"This cross I wear, no man can touch it while I live!" she cried. "And as ye have thought it seemly to brand me as a witch and bring soldiers here to arrest me, I do defy ye and do warn ye not to lay hands on me until ye have first notified my affianced husband, Sir Godfrey La Fabienne, of thine intention!"

Jeers, ejaculations of derision and contempt, also kind, cowerful laughter, followed Margaret's words.

"Sir Godfrey La Fabienne!" shrieked one woman shrilly. "Ha, ha! She doth command us to notify her white liveried lover! Ho, ho!"

With a proud, hopeless gesture of her head the accused woman turned from the crowd of sneering, sinister faces before her and, addressing the captain of the guard, who stood close at her side, said entreatingly, "Good captain, wilt thou not send notice of this outrage to my friend, Sir Godfrey La Fabienne, who for some good reason hath been detained at yonder tavern by the mill stream, the Sign of the Red Heart?"

"One moment, mistress."

The man stepped down and, going to Josiah Taunston, appeared to be consulting him, the concourse of people, now grown silent, watching with bated breath. Suddenly Taunston threw up his head and let forth a harsh, unmirthful shout of laughter.

"Canst send a message to her lover?" he cried in a loud voice of triumph. "Nay, man, thou cannot, for the dastard hath run away, and no man knoweth whither!"

With angry glances from her flashing eyes Margaret turned upon him.

"Josiah Taunston"—the words came slowly and distinctly from her pale lips—"thou hast lied basely in thy throat, and I tell thee that thou lieth. And heed thee how loudly thou doth speak, for the man liveth not long who doth call Sir Godfrey La Fabienne dastard!"

Taunston rode a few paces closer to the steps and before the throng of retainers and citizens, assuming the air of one capering on the green in wild enjoyment of their knowledge of her lover's departure and of Margaret's speedy discomfiture, this cousin, the accuser and accused, were face to face.

"Wanton! Witch! Thing of evil!" he said in a low, sneering voice. "Hear the truth from the lips of one who ever speaks truth! Thy lover, thy beauteous, honorable, noble lover, who left thee entirely to settle thy affairs, hath at the first sign of trouble run away I' the night."

"'Tis not true!" Margaret cried, with set face and gleaming eyes. "I call thee here before all listeners a speaker of untruths and do brand thee as a liar!"

"Ho, ho!" Taunston turned and addressed the chief councilor, who had come closer, with expressions of triumph in his voice and on his face. "The witch liketh not the news we bring her and refuseth to believe that her courtly lover disappeared t' the night—deserted her in her hour of need."

"Mistress Mayland," Elder Williams said sternly, "what Josiah Taunston saith is true. La Fabienne went away last night; no man knoweth whither. Fourfold too much time hath been wasted in thy foolish parleying. Officer, do thy duty."

The captain had not time to open his mouth to give the order when Margaret, springing down the steps, grasped the bridle rein of the chief councilor's horse.

"One moment, good sir. I ask for a short reprieve while some one whom I can trust doth go to the Sign of the Red Heart for Sir Godfrey. Those who know him not, who understand not his fine sense of honor, may think that he hath taken alarm and deserted me, but"—here she raised her eyes, gazing passionately into his face—"I know better; I know that he doth remain close at hand to rescue me or to give me counsel."

She swayed slightly, and the captain, touched with a feeling of pity, caught hold of her arm to steady her.

"Is there no man here who can give the damsel proper confirmation of the news we bring?" he asked gruffly.

At that moment Margaret gave a piercing shriek of joy, for Gaston, with bowed head and walking slowly, was just entering the gateway. All eyes were turned in his direction, and there was no sound from the people as he approached and knelt humbly at Margaret's feet.

"Rise, Gaston," she cried in joyful tones, "and give the message that thou dost bring from thy master. Speak loudly, so that all his wicked tongued accusers may hear and know the wrong that they have done him."

The fellow did not lift his head.

"Speak, good Gaston."

"Fair mistress," he said in thick, muffled tones, "my lord left last night."

The glow of color that had swept over Margaret's face at Gaston's appearance faded away.

"Whither went he?"

"I know not, mistress."

"Rise, stupid," she commanded, with quick impatience, "and speak the message that Sir Godfrey left for me. What good reason for his going gave he, and what tender words of counsel left he for me?"

The fellow rose, but did not meet her glance. He stood with bowed head, shifting his feet nervously.

"Blockhead, will never speak?" Margaret shook his arm angrily.

"Good Mistress Mayland," the man stammered, "I—I have but one word for thee from my master"—

"And that is?" she interrupted almost wildly in her desperation.

"Farewell."

Margaret fell back as if she had received a blow in the face, and the listening crowd closed in around them, with gloating looks and taunting words, wild with triumphant excitement. The captain laid his hand on her arm determinedly, but she threw him off and, clinging to Gaston, besought him to tell her more.

"Kind mistress," he said, "last night at about an hour after midnight, when I was sleeping soundly on a pile of straw in the stable. I felt some one touching me gently and, springing up in surprise, found my master bending over me. As I attempted to speak he put his hand over my mouth and whispered these words:

"'Gaston, positive news hath reached me that at the rising of the sun I and Mistress Mayland are to be taken into custody by the soldiers who arrived here tonight and thrown into prison. As all the passes are strongly guarded we cannot escape by'—

"'At that instant the man sleeping at my side wakened and raised on his elbow. My master, hardly daring to breathe, crouched lower in the shadow, so that I was unperceived.

"'Much more would I say,' he whispered, 'but I cannot take the risk. Tell Mistress Mayland farewell and'—

"Just then another fellow stirred, and, rousing his companion, the men exchanged words, listening. Breathless we waited until the soldiers were breathing regularly again. Then my lord, giving my hand a strong pressure, took the first safe chance and slipped noiselessly through the doorway."

"Swear what thou sayst is the truth!" Margaret cried, now standing erect before him, a deathlike pallor on her countenance.

"By the sacred memory of my mother's love I swear it!" Gaston said solemnly.

The proud head of the mistress of the Mayland farm, its covering of yellow hair pleasing in the sunlight, fell forward on her breast. The captain to hide his emotion gave a loud order, and the soldiers, with noise of clanking swords, closed in about her.

Margaret looked about her in a dazed manner.

"There is no need of force," she said dully. "I will go with thee."

The noise from the clamoring, shouting mass of people was almost deafening as the officer, leading Margaret, bareheaded and the long skirts of her riding habit trailing after her on the ground, started toward the roadway.

"To the jail! To the jail!" they cried frantically.

"The witch doth hang her head in shame of her evil deeds," said one woman, running along with a child in her arms.

"Nay," cried another. "'Tis with sorrow that her poltroon lover hath deserted her. Such kind know not shame!"

At the gateway the captain called a halt, as he wished to consult Josiah Taunston on some matter pertaining to his orders, and Elsbeth, who had been running after them in fearful agony, wringing her hands and screaming shrilly, fell at Margaret's feet and threw her arms about her in hopeless abandon.

"Oh, sweet babe, bonny Margaret," she moaned, "they are taking thee to prison, where I shall never see thee more! Can naught be done to save thee? Ah, lackaday, God's mercy on us all! They'll kill thee and no help comes."

"Grieve not, Elsbeth," Margaret an-

STRATHCONA.

Mr. W. A. Wharin, president of the public Library, Strathcona, last Saturday received a cheque from Lord Strathcona, for $1,000. About a year ago he promised this gift if the officials would put up a suitable structure and free it from encumbrances. When the public school building was enlarged, the library was moved there and is comfortably installed in its new quarters. This change took place last winter and a memorial, signed by county officials and prominent parties of Newburgh and Strathcona, was forwarded to his lordship, as all the conditions of his offer had been fulfilled. Truly, the gift is a great thing for the little village that bears the name of that illustrious Canadian, whose latest gift is one of many evidences of his great interest in Canadian affairs. A reading room will be opened, to be supplied with the dailies and current magazines, and will be a great education in that community.

RESOLUTION.

The following resolution was forwarded to His Lordship, in acknowledgement of his generous gift:

To Lord Strathcona and Mount Royal, G.C.M.G. etc.

May it please your Lordship, — We wish to convey to your Lordship an expression of at least some part of the gratitude felt by this whole country side for the generous gift of $1,000 to our Public Library. The good that this munificence will undoubtedly do not only now but in long time after our time will constitute this community, we are unable adequately to estimate. We therefore have taken on behalf of all the hosts of those to whom benefit will accrue, permit us to say that we sincerely trust your Lordship will live long to enjoy the remembrance of so great good done.

In the name of the people of Strathcona and vicinity, we heartily thank your Lordship.

W. A. WILSON, Secretary.

AN ESTEEMED LADY.

The many friends of Mrs. (Dr.) Wartman have heard with surprise and regret of her removal to Belleville. We had hoped, when she bought back her place, to have her in our midst for many years; however we are glad Belleville is not far away, and we hope to have her frequently with us. She will be missed in church, Sabbath school, reading and missionary circles, in fact in all branches of church work, and society in general. Although she will make new friends, she cannot find more nor truer ones than she has left in Napanee.

At a meeting of the W. M. S. the following resolution was submitted by Mrs. Grange and unanimously adopted :

Resolved that in view of the contemplated removal from Napanee of our beloved president, Mrs. C. D. Wartman, that this auxiliary place on record our very deep regret at losing the companionship and help of one who holds a very high place in our esteem and affection, and who has long been one of our most earnest and succesful workers. We desire especially to give a most cordial tribute to her efficiency and fidelity in discharging the duties of president during the past year. We feel that a great deal of the success which crowned our efforts last year was due to her careful, thorough, systematic supervision of the work of the society. We earnestly pray that He who has blessed her and made her a blessing in this community, will lead her into an ever enlarging sphere of usefulness in her new home, and that she may be long spared to consecrate her talents, her influence and her example for the extension of Christ's Kingdom and the spread of His gospel.

Signed in behalf of the Napanee Auxiliary,

Mrs. A. W. Grange, Cor. Sec.
of the R. of O. Branch:
Miss Hack, Rec. Secy.

LEAVING CAMDEN EAST.

On September 12th a large number of the friends of Mrs. Robert Fee, in the vicinity of Camden East, met at her home to spend one more social evening under her hospitable roof, before the old home passed into other hands. After refreshments were served, her pastor, Rev. J. Gandier, Newburgh, made the speech of the evening. He referred to her well known reputation for hospitality, no one leaving her home hungry; of her cordial welcome to unexpected guests, the help she gave to every good work, and of the loss sustained by the Presbyterian congregation in her departure. He spoke of her being indeed a "mother in Israel," as out of her family of four sons, three were ministers, one a missionary in China, the other a medical doctor. wished to give substantial proof of their good will, he called upon Mrs. James O'Hara who presented Mrs. Fee with a solid leather dress suit case. Mrs. Fee made thankful reply, and feelingly spoke of the many happy hours she had enjoyed with her friends in the home to which she had come as a bride. She looked forward to happy reunions in the future.

Mr. Gandier then said there were others who had something to say. One after another bore witness to her many sterling qualities, and each spoke of some special kindness received, and summed up of a hearty welcome whenever she again visited Camden East. The meeting closed with prayer and the singing of the doxology, the good-byes were spoken with many expressions of regret for her departure.

The Sunday following, at the close of the revival exercises, Donald Fee was presented with an elegant timepiece from his friends in the Sabbath school, as a souvenir of their pleasant associations. Mrs. Fee leaves to visit relatives and friends for some months, and Donald Fee to resume his studies at Queens.

Only one consideration ought to count when it comes to buying drugs—the necessity of getting the best. No store deserves your trade because it is the largest, handiest, or because you are acquainted there.

In drug trading, seek quality first. You can trust the prices of the store that insists on giving you trade. We furnish you with drugs of absolute purity. We make it our business to know that our goods are right. On this we rely for the trade of those who buy drugs carefully.

We also give customers the best possible attention and the fairest prices.

He has collected most of the valuable pieces in his collection himself. The coins are all classified and kept in glass cases in four large rooms of the royal palace. "IF I PERISH, I PERISH"

DRAMATIC STORY OF BEAUTIFUL QUEEN ESTHER RETOLD.

COURAGE AND PATRIOTISM

Saves Her Race From Destruction—Old Bible Story Contains Lesson For Women of To-day—Are They Ready to Brave All Things to Become More Than a Mere Puppet of Man?

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1905, by Rev. Dr. Talmage, at the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Oct. 1.—In the story of beautiful Queen Esther, whose courage and patriotism saved her race from destruction, the preacher finds a noble lesson for the women of to-day. The text is Esther iv, 16, "If I perish, I perish."

Have you ever read the blood-curdling story of the massacre of St. Bartholomew? No. Then perhaps you have seen copies of the great masterpieces of the Venetian artists, Tintoretto, and of Peter Paul Rubens, entitled, "The Massacre of the Innocents." From these two thrilling pictures you gain an idea of what that most awful tragedy in France, known as the massacre of St. Bartholomew, must have been like. In those pictures you can see the frantic eyes of the mothers watching the murderers of their children coming nearer and nearer to their prey. You can see some of these mothers run away in the distance with their babies under their arms. In dramatic contrast to the pleading, praying, frenzied and helpless looks of these agonized mothers you can see Herod's butchers driving in a sword here, striking down a baby there; ripping open the tender body of a beautiful infant beyond, tossing up a child farther on as a trickster might toss a card and catching it upon the edge of a sharp pointed knife. All these fiendish murders were done as nonchalantly and unconcernedly and with as much diabolical abandon and wish as the agents of Nana Sahib, who entered the Cawnpore slaughter house during the mutiny of 1857 and struck farther on as a trickster might toss a card and catching it upon the edge of a sharp pointed knife. All these fiendish murders were done as nonchalantly and unconcernedly and with as much diabolical abandon and wish as the agents of Nana Sahib, who entered the Cawnpore slaughter house during the mutiny of 1857 and struck their heads to the bone. Or you can see some of these mothers running away in the distance with their babies under their arms. In dramatic contrast to the pleading, praying, frenzied and helpless looks of these agonized mothers you can see Herod's butchers driving in a sword here, striking down a baby there; ripping open the tender body of a beautiful infant beyond, tossing up a child

He was offered a position in the cabinet.

Why didn't he take it?

Just because he couldn't walk to the telegraph office.—Detroit Journal.

Dr. Flesick—Well, yes; I suppose you should take some mild tonic—something to build you up. Have a drink?

Dr. Fissick—Oh, no; that's Teutonic.

Pains Disappear Before It.—No one need suffer pain when they have avail able Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil. It is not in the house when required it can be procured at the nearest store. All merchants keep it for sale. Rheumatism and all bodily pains disappear when it is applied, and should they at any time return, a few applications of the liver of the Oil bow to deal with them after the swelling ceases. Then a happy couple had retired down in a corn field.

One morning as she took her custom ary place at the breakfast table the bride placed a letter addressed by the side of her plate.

"Why, my dear," exclaimed the astonished husband, "what does that mean?"

"It means, George," replied her bride, "that we have started on my own construction for breakfast and use no adverse criticism will be tolerated."

A NEW LITERARY RECORD.

A new literary record is made by the Canadian Magazine with its October issue. This number marks the completion of twenty-five volumes without a change in management, with only one change in its editor, and without a publishing slip of any kind. Such a record is unique in Canadian literary annals, except for the case of the Revue Canadienne of Montreal, which has been published without a break since 1864. This desire is also noteworthy in its range of contributors. Benjamin Suite writes of "The Beginnings of French-Canadian Literature," Professor Macdechan deals with "the Literature of Nova Scotia," and there is also an article on "The Women Writers of Canada." Arthur Hawkes, Editor of the Toronto News, writes of "Journalism and Public Life in Canada." In his usual trenchant style, Robert Barr has some delightful predictions as to the future of Canada and Great Britain. There are illustrated articles on Nelson's victory, and the inauguration of the new Provinces. There are stories by Mr. Barr, Miss Norman Duncan, Eric Bohn, William Wisenman, Louis Frechette and Joe Brodhique Summers. There are poems by Charles G. D. Roberts, Wilfrid Campbell and Lily Dougall Lever. The whole is dressed in a special cover, with a Buffalo head surrounded by wheat sheaves—an appropriate emblematic design.

REIDVILLE.

The apple crop is excellent in this vicinity.

A great many of the farmers are completing of the fall work.

Mrs. D. Fuller, of Bancroft, has returned home, after spending a few days with friends here.

Mrs. J. Kelusley and little daughter, Vereen, of Bancroft, is spending a few weeks with her mother, Mrs. Hannah.

Mr. Albert Hughes, Sarkeis Harbor, is renewing old acquaintances here.

Mr. and Mrs. Johnson Coughlin and daughter were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Johnston Hannah, on Sunday last.

Miss Hattie Hannah has returned home, after spending a few days with friends at Napanee and Big Creek.

FOR OVER SIXTY YEARS.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup has been used by millions of mothers for their children while teething. If disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it. It cures Diarrhoea, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Sold by all druggists throughout the world. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup."

Closed Mills are now open for grinding every day. WM. WOODRUFF, Proprietor.

WISE AND OTHERWISE.

Some people make mountains out of molehills, and others fail to make a molehill.

It's often the case of saws that grate on the nerves.

A Cure for Costiveness.—Costiveness arises from the refusal of the excretory organs to perform their duties regularly from some cause or other, usually disordered digestion. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills gently but surely, in a few principles, are so compounded that certain ingredients in them pass through the stomach and act upon the bowels so as to remove their torpor without causing them to become active. Many thousands are prepared to bear testimony to their power in this respect.

Trench: they had never met b—4.

What could be more delightful than to see loved him tenderly because he was a lover?

In Nature's Storehouse There Are Cures.—Medical experiments have shown conclusively that there exists in every ordinary plant growing up around us which gives them a valuable medicinal quality. It is held by some that Nature provides a remedy for every disease which neglect and ignorance have visited upon man. However this may be, it is well known that Parmelee's Vegetable Pills, distilled from roots and herbs, are a sovereign remedy in curing all disorders of the digestive.

"Why, John," exclaimed Mrs. Newlad as she came into the room, "what in the world makes that baby cry so?"

"I don't know, my dear," answered Newlad, as he brushed the powder off his mother. "I imagine he is thinking of what the Governor of North Carolina said to the Governor of South Carolina."

"John," whispered John's wife, "I'm thoroughly convinced we're a burglar downstairs."

"Well, dear," replied the husband slyly, "I hope you don't expect me to have the courage of your convictions."

Do not delay in getting relief for the little folks. Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil is a pleasant and sure cure. If you love your child why not have it now? Delay when a remedy is so near at hand?

Willie—There's a new baby up to our house.

Mrs. Jones—Ah, what's his name?

Willie—We dunno yet. He can't talk.

There are a number of varieties of corns. Holloway's Corn Cure will remove any of them. Try it on your druggist and get a bottle at once.

The Departing Guest, after paying his bill, sarcastically—I distinctly hear your conscience won't trouble you!

The Summer Hotel Proprietor—Didn't worry, sir; we don't care how you got the money.

No one need fear cholera or any summer complaint if they have a bottle of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial ready for use. It corrects all looseness of the bowels promptly and causes a healthy action of the liver. This is a medicine adapted for the young and old, rich and poor, and is rapidly becoming the most popular medicine for cholera, dysentery, etc., in the market.

He was offered a position in the cabinet.

THE ISLAND FAIR.

Amherst Island Fair was held at Stella, on Tuesday, the 26th Sept. The weather could not have been more favorable, and as usual a large number of people came over on the Alcyna from Bath and other parts, and almost every one on the Island turned out.

The entries were not as large as other years, but on the whole there was a very good exhibit. The Judges pronounced the class of horses of an excellent quality and the ladies' class was well filled with many fine specimens of their handy work.

The cheap art not very numerous on the Island, consequently a small exhibit, but good of its kind.

In the cattle exhibit Mr. Richey showed a fine Durham bull, and Mr. Howard a fine Holstein bull. Owing to plenty of pasture the cattle were all in good shape. These should have been a larger display of pigs, but the difficulty of bringing them out keeps the exhibit small.

Mr. Rooney, from Kingston, added to the day's enjoyment, by driving a race for the fastest single horse, and race took place in the afternoon, in which Mrs. Rooney was present in an easy winner. The same gentleman kindly gave a prize for the best butter and Mrs. Glen Jr. was the winner.

Mr. Caughey, from the premium list, offered a prize for the best looking child at 1 year old, and more competitors came forward. Mr. Rooney said that he was glad to help the young people, and make some acknowledgment of their kindness, and offered a prize to see some offers of the merchants to come forward and help him for his next year's list. A premium which the Society are very grateful to him for, and also for their thanks to him for his assistance this year.

Subjoined is the prize winners:

Judges on Horses—J. McCaugherty and D. Amey.

Rushing late into the smoking car for Atlantic City on a mail train—

"A corkscrew! Who's got a corkscrew?"

A score of kindly hands sought pockets, and a score of kindly voices said,

"Here you are, sir."

"I thought so," shouted the old man, as he threw 1 in before you, gentlemen, fifty temperance pledges. Who will sign the first?"

Washington White, a famous negro of Boston, was once observed sitting in a street car not less than a dozen friend inquired if he were ill, and, receiving a negative reply, said—

"Then why are you waving back and forth like that?"

Washington White made no pause in his regular oscillations as he answered: "Boahdwell, I'se jes' sayin' 'No' to myself. You done sold me a silver watch, a gold watch, an' a gold chain, an' a movin' picture machine in the last ten minutes, an' I'se jes' watchin' myself to see when I'm gwine to stop."

Teacher—What is a synonym?

Pupil—A word that has the same meaning as another word.

Teacher—And why does our language possess synonyms?

Pupil—So you can use one when you don't know how to spell the other one.

"Why do you insist on keeping a parrot?"

"Because," answered the lonely man, "it has to hear it talk. The parrot is the only creature gifted with the power of speech that is content to repeat just what it hears without trying to make a good story of it."

He has seven children with an age, after which the mother would be confined, saturated it with coal oil, and set fire to it. Did you ever have your range grates burn out?

If you did you will know what that means in common ranges—it means plumbers, delay, muss and big bills—because common ranges are built that way. As range grates must some time burn out you are certain to have that kind of trouble if yours is a common range.

If you have the Pandora you won't have any trouble, because you can take out the old grates and put in the new ones in ten minutes, and a ten cent piece for a screw-driver does it easier in the Pandora than a whole kit of plumbers' tools will do it in common ranges.

A ten cent piece for a screw-driver is all you need to take out old and put in new Pandora grates.

MILK

The interior of a cow's udder contains a marvellous collection of blood veins, milk tubes, etc.

As far as known the milk secretion is largely dependent on the amount of blood passing through the udder.

If the blood circulation, the digestion and assimilation of food are good she will show a higher milk secretion than otherwise; as in a boiler, the better the condition it is in the more steam can be generated.

Clydesdale Stock Food

will stimulate the organs of circulation and digestion, because it makes the food "tasty," increasing the digestive juices that dissolve the food, and this means more milk and at a profit.

For cows at "Calving," there is nothing better as it tones and regulates the system, helping her to "clean" better, and, lessening the usual danger.

Can stop feeding it without harmful effects as there is nothing injurious in it. Human beings can take it with benefit. We take it every day.

Your money cheerfully refunded by the dealer if not satisfied.

"A BELL BOY."

A handsome little bunch of girls will prance and caveort at the Brisco Opera House on Tuesday evening, 10th October, in that hilarious musical melange "A Bell Boy." Sometimes they are garbed as soldier girls, other times as Japanese maidens, and again in diverse costumes of bright and brilliant hue. At all times they are bright eyed and roguish and all nearly measure the same height to an inch. The chief charm of "A Bell Boy" is the tuneful musical melodies and the jaunty methods of principles and chorus.

FOLEY—DORAN.

A very quiet but pretty wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Foley, Marlbank, when their daughter Lizzie was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to Charles Doran of Deseronto. The ceremony was performed in the R. C. church, Earnsville, by Rev. Father Carey. The bride was very prettily attired in white cashmere with hat to match, assisted by Miss Mary Bennett of Reid, cousin of the groom, who was attired in blue voile with hat to match. The groom was assisted by Mr. Terrance Foley brother of the bride. After the ceremony was performed the bridal party drove to the home of the bride where breakfast was served. They received numerous and costly presents showing the esteem in which they were held.

"SIDE TRACKED."

"Side Tracked," which will be played at the Brisco Opera House, Thursday night, October 12th, like Young Lochinvar, has come out of the west, where it has been a popular attraction for some time. It is breezy and always on the move, like the country from which it sprung. After all, the best test of the merits of a dramatic play is in the verdict of those for whose amusement it is intended, and judged by that standard "Side Tracked" will prove a great success here. In the course of the performance a number of diverting specialties are given. "Side Tracked" is a powerful yet laughable comedy drama, in fact has comedy enough to stock three or four melodramas. It will be produced with new ingenious mechanicol effects and striking costumes.

HALL—LUCAS.

A very pretty wedding took place at the Methodist church, Ftarny, B.C., it being the occasion of the marriage of Miss M. Edna Lucas, daughter of Mr. Albert Lucas, formerly of Centreville, to Mr. Ernest Hall, druggist of Fairview, Vancouver. Rev. Joseph Hall, Chilliwack, B.C., father of the groom, assisted by Rev. T. W. Hall, pastor, performed the ceremony. The bride was assisted by her sister, Miss Lena Lucas, and the groom by Dr. Gibson, of Fairview, Vancouver. The bride was handsomely gowned in a brown broadcloth suite with hat to match, carried a bouquet of cream roses and maidenhair fern and was given away by her uncle, Mr. James Tuttle. The bridesmaid was becomingly dressed in a garnet taffeta silk costume with turban to match. The wedding march was played by Mrs. J. W. Foster, of Vancouver, cousin of the bride, and the church was beautifully decorated with flowers and foliage. After the ceremony, refreshments were served at the home of Mr. Tuttle, the only guests being intimate friends and relatives. The bride was the recipient of many handsome and useful presents. The happy couple left on the Imperial Limited for Harrison, Hot Springs, and on their return will take up their residence at Fairview, Vancouver.

FRENCH—ASSELSTINE.

A beautiful house wedding was celebrated on Wednesday, Oct. 4th, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Whitgey Asselstine, when their daughter, Bertha Katie, was united in marriage to Mr. Schuyler French, eldest son of Mr. Wm. French, of Richmond. Rev. C. W. DeMille, of Roblin, performed the ceremony. Miss Josephine Lemay presided at the piano, and acceptably rendered Mendelssohn's wedding march, as the bride, becoming in gown of white, with veil and wreath of orange blossoms, entered on the arm of her father. The young couple were married under a bower of evergreens and flowers. Miss Bessie French, sister of the groom, acted as bridesmaid, while Mr. Fred Hall, of Roblin, sweetened the groom. Little Lucia and Marguerite Asselstine were flower girls, and by means of white ribbons formed an aisle for the entrance of the bride. A large number of relatives and friends witnessed the service, and a multitude of useful and beautiful presents attested the high esteem in which the bride was held. The groom's present to his bride was a gold cross set with whole pearls, and to the bridesmaid, a birth-stone ring set with an amethyst. The bride's present to the bridesmaid was a brooch set with brilliants, and the groom's to the groomsman a scarf pin. The young couple left for Oswego, Buffalo, Niagara and points west. They expect to return at the end of about two weeks. Rice, flowers, old shoes and good wishes followed them in great abundance, and many friends wish the young couple great happiness.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CONVENTION.

The Ontario Christian Endeavor Union convention will be held in the City of Belleville, on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of next week. The sessions will be held in Bridge St. Methodist church. Several eminent speakers will be present, including Rev. Elmore Harris, D.D., Dr. McTavish, S. D. Chown, Alex. Esler, Toronto; Rev. E. A. Henry, Hamilton; Mr. Wm. Shaw, Boston; Rev. Dr. McTavish, Kingston. The singing will be conducted by E. O. Excell, Chicago. Excursion rates on the G. T. R.

SPECIAL SERVICES.

The special services held in the Western Methodist church, under the leadership of Rev. R. McHardy, have increased in interest. His plain, earnest, practical addresses will not soon be forgotten by the people of this town. Sunday next he will preach at 10.30 a.m. and 7 p.m. In the afternoon at 3 o'clock he will address a mass meeting of men, women and children, subject "Gambling and Card Playing." A cordial invitation is extended to all. Next Monday night will probably be his last evening here.

PRESBYTERIAL UNION.

The annual convention of the Kingston Presbyterial Union held in the Napanee Presbyterian church on Tuesday last proved interesting and instructive to those who attended its sessions. A number of delegates were present from outside points. The programme, as published, was carried out in its main features. Mrs. Ross, of Picton, failed to give her paper. Rev. J. C. Robertson, of Toronto, gave two interesting addresses, his talk in the evening on "The supreme aim of the S. S." being a masterpiece in its clearness, simplicity and spiritual tone. The other addresses given by Rev. R. S. Laidlaw, Rev. Dr. MacTavish and Mr. F. C. Anderson were all of a high character and rich in suggestiveness. The convention could not fail to stimulate a deeper interest in the work of the church.

WHAT IS AN ELOCUTIONARY CONTEST?

In The Beaver of Sept. 29th it was stated that "The Epworth League of the Eastern Methodist Church is arranging for an elocutionary contest, to take place in the Town Hall, October 31st." The question has been asked, "What is such a contest?" It is a temperance elocutionary contest in which a number of amateur reciters, usually young people, compete for a medal. Many years ago Mr. William Demorest, a wealthy citizen of New York, started the scheme. He gave the medals. At first the contests in Canada were for the Demorest medals. When Mr. Demorest died, his heirs limited their efforts to the United States, and Demorest medals no longer came to Canada. The work was such a good one that the Canadian Royal Templars took it up. Such is the contest that will be given in the Town Hall on October 31st, under the auspices of the Epworth League of the Eastern Methodist church. Remember the date.

NEWBURGH.

Rev. Dr. Chown, of Toronto, will preach in the Methodist church on Sunday evening, Oct. 8th. On the Monday following a temperance convention will be held in the Methodist church, morning, afternoon and evening sessions being held. Rev. Dr. Chown will be the principal speaker and will explain fully the working of the local option. The public are cordially invited to come and hear the questions discussed.

Our citizens are beginning to wonder if anything is to be done toward the restarting of the electric lights in Newburgh. It seems too bad that the plant should be lying idle when the lights are so badly needed, especially on the street.

Mr. Youmans, our new druggist, arrived on Monday.

We understand that Yarker and Newburgh baseball teams will play here to-morrow.

Miss Ella Chant spent Sunday in Tamworth.

Dr. Beeman, of Perth, spent a few days last week with his brother, Dr. M. I. Beeman.

James Boyce has been appointed caretaker of the academy.

A game of football was played last week on the H. S. ground between teams from the school and town, the school winning by 2-0.

The annual harvest home service was held in St. John's church on Sunday evening. The altar was tastefully decorated with flowers while around the church were grains and roots, all tokens of an abundant harvest. Rev. Tighe, of Kingston, preached an impressive sermon.

F. G. Miller attended the wedding of Miss Baxter at Yarker on Thursday.

TAMWORTH.

Adam Gilmore died Sunday night, Oct. 1st. The funeral sermon on Tuesday at 10 a.m., was preached by Rev. Mr. Henry, at Presbyterian church, to a large congregation. Mr. Gilmore was a highly respected farmer and a good man among the people. His family will mourn the loss of a kind husband and good father. They have the sympathy of the surrounding country.

The concert given by the Anson family, Napanee, in the town hall, to a crowded house, on the night of our show, was a decided success. The Ladies' Aid deserve great credit for the able manner in which they advertised and conducted it. The proceeds were over $90.

FAMOUS PEOPLE

BY FANNIE M. LOTHROP

LORD STRATHCONA

Photograph by Notman, Montreal

Canadian High Commissioner to London

In 1838 a young Scotch boy of eighteen, named Donald A. Smith, entered the service of the Hudson Bay Co. He had been educated for the Civil Service in India; but the sturdy life of hardship, the rigorous clear, hard-to-hand battle with fate, somehow appealed to him more than the easier and more enervating life of the Orient.

For thirteen years he labored on the hard, Labrador coast, where the climate was inhuman, the monotony insurmountable, the loneliness appalling, and promotion seemed slower than the movement of a glacier. But young Smith made his record, and in that rough training learned self-reliance, courage, self-conquest, prudence and shrewdness among the softies, and a sureness of judgment. He learned to conquer obstacles and to laugh in triumph at them. In 1869 he had gradually risen to the post of resident-governor—the supreme possibility under the Hudson Bay Co.

When the Federation decided to take over the title of the company, they met an obstacle in the opposition of the Metis, the half-breeds of the prairies, who rose in rebellion under the leadership of the fanatic Louis Riel. In this extremity Donald Smith was recognized, and his courage, tact and wisdom aided in putting the Gordian knot of disagreement. He also became the most powerful man of the Northwest, and a year later was elected to the House of Commons. Then came the fierce battle against the opposition, and Donald Smith's persistency in building the great railroad connecting the oceans, and later the organizing of the company, headed by Mr. Smith (the future Lord Strathcona) and his cousin, Lord Mount Stephen, that built the magnificent railroad on the ruins of the Government's hopeless failure. Lord Strathcona's financial ability, his organizing power, his genius to inspire others to see and to realize his visions, carried the day; and as J. J. Hill says, "the one person to whose efforts and confidence in the growth of our country, our success in early railroading is due, is Lord Strathcona."

He received his first imperial honor in 1896 and in 1897 was raised to the peerage. His manifold duties defy catalogueing: as financier, statesman, philanthropist, and in various other fields he has been pre-eminent, and like all really great men has retained his simplicity through it all. To-day, at the age of seventy-five, he is Canadian High Commissioner in London, a most exacting position, and his marvelous knowledge of Canadian affairs and his other unique qualities would make it impossible to replace him.

Entered according to Act of the Parliament of Canada, in the year 1905, by W. C. Black, at the Department of Agriculture.

WANTS A SKATING RINK.

October 12th, 1907.

To the Editor of The Beaver:

Dear Sir,—I would like to know if, before it is too late, any steps are going to be taken towards providing a decent skating rink in the town. Last winter there was practically no rink at all, or what there was wasn't fit for any one to go into.

It seems to me that the citizens of Napanee act very selfishly in this matter. They have a curling rink for their own amusement and exercise, and yet they never give a thought to their boy children, or to any of those who have not the money or desire to curl, but care to curl. However, the curlers get up concerts and the public give the money to pay for the privilege of those who are more than able to pay for their own.

During the winter months there are a number of entertainments given in schools here; yet there is nothing for them to do or to go to after school is out at four, with the exception of the library. So where do they go? Why, to the poolrooms and hotels, of course.

From another point of view, a rink would be a good paying investment. The hockey matches alone would support it. And Napanee has always been noted for the first class hockey it puts up. Also, what better advertisement of a town could there be than a winning team in any sport. Sport has surely been cried down long enough in Napanee, and so let's wake up to the fact that when will be a credit to our town and a boon to young and old.

Yours very sincerely,

READER.

The W. M. S. of this place attended a Convention at Switzerville on Wednesday, and report a fine meeting of interest and profit to all. They were favored with a royalty, both musically and physically.

Well, the fair has come and gone over. A fine day could not have been wished for, and a great many took advantage of it and came prepared in their best, and seemed to have enjoyed themselves. The display in rooms of several places were well patronized. Everything passed off with a hurr. We from thought that the Odessa fair was the best on the circuit. However, we shall see in the list if we do.

A concert in aid of the Public Library was held in the Town Hall, which was packed to the doors. A nice sum was realized.

ERNESTTOWN SHOW.

The Ernesttown Agricultural Society was again favored with glorious weather for its annual show, on Friday last, the 6th inst. This proved to be the last of the county, and townships exhibitions, and is invariably favored with splendid weather.

As usual on these annual events at Odessa, there was an immense crowd, all parts of the county being represented, as well as representatives of the various towns in this section.

The show was a good one, the only apparent falling off being in the horse and cattle classes, which from year to year appear to be growing less. This is not as it should be. There was a time when Ernesttown show had on exhibition some of the finest shorthorn herds in the Province, and the rivalry between the various breeders was keen. This township was also so proud of its showing of horse flesh, and no show years ago brought out finer horses of the various classes. Some of the directors were of the opinion that the decrease in the quality is raised as good horses as formerly, but owing to the demand for fine dry matter, everything of extra quality was picked up by outside buyers. The fine classes containing sheep, swine, etc., were well filled, and the quality excellent.

Inside the drill shed, everything was neatly arranged and divided off into the various classes, and the large hall there looked better. This is in great measure due to Mr. Geo. Ferguson, who devoted a great deal of time and work to making the exhibits show up to the best advantage for the benefit of spectators. The display in the hall was large and everything in the different departments of fancy work, useful and ornamental work, carriages, dairy ness, fruit, vegetables, roots, poultry, plants, flowers, etc., showed the thrift of the farmers and their good wives of Ernesttown, and the evidence of industry thereof.

Messrs. VanDusen Bros., Moscow, had on exhibition one of their popular Newcombe pianos, and a Sharpless separator, for which they are local agents.

Mr. M. W. Simkins, the veteran sewing machine dealer, was on hand with an exhibit of his machines, which sold all afternoon surrounded by a crowd.

During the day excellent music was furnished by Odessa band. This organization has been in existence but a year, but, under the able leadership and tuition of Mr. W. Partridge, Yarker, has made wonderful progress. The band has twenty-three members all in good standing, and have a repertoire of good, reliable music, some of which are the best manufactured today. These instruments are all paid for, besides also paying their instructor.

The Sydenham band was also in attendance, and added much to the pleasure of the visitors.

The genial secretary-treasurer, Mr. Jas. A. Timmerman, and the officials of the Society are to be congratulated on the success of the show, which certainly is one of the most popular in the country.

A most successful concert was held in the evening, in aid of the public library of that place. It being fair day, the management looked for a crowded house, but their expectations were more than realized, as over 150 people were turned away, unable to gain admission. The following programme was furnished by Miss Emma T. Irens, elocutionist, of Toronto, Miss Bessie Reynolds, violinist and Cl. Cuper, vocalist of Kingston.

Good Bread should please the Eye as well as the Palate.

Why does the dainty housewife delight in snowy napery, glittering cut-glass, burnished silver, delicate china and all other table allurements dear to feminine hearts?

And what man does not appreciate table beauty?

It is not that we appreciate the appearance of our food almost as much as the taste of it?

Bread may be ever so wholesome, well-flavored and made of scientifically milled flour, but with all these qualities we want it to look dainty, appetising, snowy-white, with nut-brown crust, and be firm and silky in texture.

Royal Household Flour makes just that kind of bread.

The electrical purification and sterilization of Royal Household Flour makes it yield not only absolutely pure bread, but bread of snowy whiteness and beautiful texture—bread that will grace the prettiest table or give beauty to the humblest meal served on the plainest dishes.

You can prove this by trying a 25 lb. bag —you must have flour, why not have the best.

GEO. HARRIS.

THE WITCH OF CRAGENSTONE

"Josiah, dear brother, an thou would let me speak with Elder Tamston of the council, happen I would have influence wi' him."

"Ho, ho! Thine influences!" Josiah laughed scornfully. "Going in public against thy brother! A dutiful sister, prithee, to make my boasts on!"

Here his manner changed, growing stern and commanding.

"Thou'rt to stay here, faint heart, an' mind the house! I' faith, I'll have no care that with so much important work on hand we have no swooning scenes wi' silly wenches."

As he finished speaking a man, one of the horse boys at the Sign of the Red Heart, came swiftly up the pathway.

"Master Taunston," he said, panting slightly, "I ha' come wi' news! The witch's lover hath fled!"

"Gone!" Josiah ejaculated in surprise. "Aye, 'tis found that he stole away i' the night," the man replied.

"Here's a crown, Tobias, for 'tis good news that thou hast brought," Taunston cried exultantly. "The white livered poltroon hath great influence at court, and his detention might have brought us trouble. Once down the mountain we will see that he is not return again until the evil woman we seek to punish hath received her just deserts. Hetty, see that thou doth my bidding," he said roughly, pushing her from out of his way with the handle of his whip. "Spring up behind, Tobias; we'll ride to the inn. Dost not hear shouting? Methinks already the villain is astir."

He gave spurs to his horse. Hetty's fresh cause in grasps as she stood with her hands clasped over her heart watching her brother and his companion speed away. She sank down upon the doorstep and tried to collect her thoughts. What news was this she had just heard? Her mind was dazed. Handsome, gallant Sir Godfrey La Fabienne only a fair day's weeper? Did a man live with heart base enough to deceit one so sweet and trusting as Margaret?

Hetty's bewildered and bitterly disappointed, with all her romantic illusions dispelled, Hetty covered up her face, and a remembrance of the preacher's warnings and words against the wicked fashionable men of the gay cities and their deceiving ways, also her mother's sinister predictions concerning La Fabienne's fickle love for Margaret, came to her. Her heart fluttered painfully in a perfect turmoil of agitation, distress and indescribable emotion. Yes, it must be true, and the idol she had set up on such a high pedestal above all others had tumbled to the ground and fallen in broken pieces at her feet.

How cold the gray dawn was! She shivered slightly and with a quick motion drew her kerchief closer about her white throat. How strangely lonely she felt, for the first time in her life at odds with her mother and brother and for her foolish vanity and proud airs totally ignored and slighted by her old comrade and lover, Simon Kempster! As her sad thoughts turn to him she sprang to her feet and looked down the mountain in the direction of his house. Was he, like the others, preparing in grim enjoyment to go to the Mayland farm to see Margaret accused and taken? She shook her head in the negative. Surely one so good and stout of heart as Simon could not believe that sweet Margaret would sinfully connive with the devil to wreak harm on others! Wringing her hands distractedly, the girl walked to the little gate before the house. Was that a wreath of smoke curling out of the new fashioned stone chimney that Simon had so lately and with such pride built out on the side of his kitchen, or was it only the mist rising?

Hetty gazed wistfully in the direction of the white cloud for a few moments, then, throwing up her head with a great show of indifference, returned by steps to the door and sank down upon the wooden bench. But a strong feeling of unrest was upon her, for soon she was at the gate again. Then, as an impulse seized her, she ran down the roadway toward Simon's house.

On, on she sped, so fast one would suppose she was afraid her pride might urge her to turn back again, holding up her light skirts as she went. The fresh morning breeze tossed her hair about and, with its rough caresses, brought the red color back to her pale face. Once or twice it grew so strong and pushed against her with such force that one might think it had no sympathy with her project and wished to push her backward, but she ran on

The Toilers in Our Factories.

No workmen in the world can do so much or use the same intelligence that our own American work-men and women are capable of. That is why America is now beating the world in manufactures; all due to the brain and muscle of our Yankee men and women.

Unfortunately where there is smoke, dirt and dust and little sunlight there also can be found the germs of disease. Nature's great disinfectant is sunlight. It is in the factory, the workshop, the office, that men and women suffer from diseases which are in the dust and the bad air. Such disease germs enter into the blood in two ways, either through the lungs or stomach.

After years of experience in medicine, Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., discovered a remedy that is a blood-maker and tissue-builder, at the same time alterative and tonic. He called it Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery—an alterative extract that assists in the digestion and assimilation of the food—so that the blood gets its elements from the purest of digestion, the liver at the same time is started into activity and there is perfect elimination of waste matter. The germs of grip, malaria, catarrh or consumption find a fertile field if the body is not kept in perfect order and the blood pure.

Because the stomach is diseased there is a diminution of the red corpuscles of the blood. This is why grip is sleepless, languid, nervous and irritable. Sensitive stomachs groan aloud at the irritating cod liver oils, but they will get all the food elements the tissues require by using the "Golden Medical Discovery."

The "Discovery" is absolutely a non-alcoholic and non-secret medicine. There is nothing else "just as good."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are the best laxative for old and young people. They cure constipation and biliousness.

Dejectedly resting his head on his hand.

unheeding until, breathless and panting she reached Kempster's door. From her place on the step she could look into the kitchen. Logs were burning in the chimney, and a hissing cadron of water was steaming above them.

Hetty put her hands together over her heart as she saw Simon sitting on the settle before it. His broad back was toward the window, but she could see that he was leaning over dejectedly, resting his head on his hand. Softly lifting the latch, she entered and stood just inside the door. Kempster was evidently deep in thought, for the faint sounds did not disturb him.

"Simon!"

He sprang to his feet and looked at her in the greatest astonishment.

"Am I wanted? Doth any one need me?" he asked stiffly, trying to attribute any other reason for her coming.

"Nay, thou'rt not wanted," Hetty replied falteringly, "and—and no one else."

"Then I suppose the sunrise service is apt to be a chill i' the air," Simon said indifferently. "Didst wear no woolen about thee?"

He looked around the room. Hetty hastily put out her hand to prevent his rising.

"Nay, get me nothing." She sighed a gentle, fluttering sigh. "The bright fire on thy hearth, Simon, hath already warmed me."

Kempster regarded the small, graceful figure in its gray dress and white kerchief, kneeling there in the glare of the fire so close to him, with pain tugging at his heart such as he had in his mind. Was this a new mood—just another of her tantalizing ways? Had she come back only to worry and torment him? Hetty, glancing up, met his quiet glance.

"When thou'rt ready to go," he remarked, with studied coldness, "happen I can find a vehicle to take thee."

At his words her heart sank within her. Of a certain he had ceased to love her, so she would speak of other matters

"Thank thee, Simon. When I go an' I am a trifle warmer I will take it."

Then, as if with a sudden thought, she added mournfully, "Simon, didst know that the council hath ordered our Margaret to the prison?"

"Yea, the fearsome news hath reached me."

"An' that the man she loved better than her life hath deserted her in her hour of peril?"

Kempster sat erect with a sudden start.

"The courtier, Sir Godfrey La Fabienne?" he asked in surprise.

She choked back a sob.

"None other, as thou knowest. Ah, lackaday, poor Margaret!"

"Thy news doth surprise me," he said quietly, "as the knight had ever an open countenance and a manly bearing. But I were this moment ashamed for love to grow between a man and woman all on one side."

Hetty laid a supplicating hand on his arm.

Simon's breath came quickly, but his voice was stern as he said: "Hadst not better take a chair? Thou'lt find but poor comfort on the floor."

"Nay, Simon," she cried tearfully, "be not so churlish to thine old playtime friend. Ah, Simon, Simon Hetty, little Hetty Taunston, who when thou wert but a lad, long before thy mother died, did rise in hour o' day to meet her at the bars and help her drive the cows to grass?"

Simon turned his eyes toward her and regarded searchingly the small upturned face. What new coquetry was this? He set his teeth and steeled his heart against her.

"Such a friendship as hath ever been between us, Simon," she began in a low voice, hesitatingly, "should not be broken off for such trifles as a word of explanation. Simon, I—I remember the words thou did speak to me that day i' the dairy, when I was so hot with passion because a coward and courtier—a man who covered his black heart with fine raiment and wore a gallant bearing to deceive folk —did remark about my beauty that I flouted thee and did scorn the offer of thy honest heart and faithful love."

Kempster regarded her seriously, anxiously; once he reached out his hand toward her, but drew it back hastily.

"So proud was I an' so full of idle dreams of a gay life in town that in the time I scarce did miss thee," she continued, "but anon I became lonely, dissatisfied, unhappy and did not rest, ly know what did ail me until I met the quiet scorn of thy glance and knew myself for the foolish, worthless maid that I was. Then, Simon," she cried softly, "it hurt me to learn that I had lost the regard of one good man; my heart ached, an' I was sore troubled."

"Hetty"—he spoke her name sharply—"say no more unless thou doth truly mean thy words!"

"I truth, I mean so much more than I have said to thee," she went on sadly, "that I despair of ever making my lips frame the words my heart doth bid them speak."

A faint sound of the noisy clamoring of the crowd at the Mayland farm was swept in through the window by the breeze. Hetty shuddered and, edging nearer to Simon, laid her small hand on his.

"Forgive me. No longer shut thy kind heart against me, Simon. Be my friend again. Truly I love thee."

He threw up his head with a sharp, indrawn breath.

"Hetty, thou must speak out what thou dost mean!" he cried. "There can be but one thing between us, and that is—love! Before God, I will be thy friend, but I must be thy husband also."

A glow of color mantled her face and throat.

"If thou would deem me worthy," she faltered, with drooping head, "an' I were one-half good enough, I would ask thee to o'erlook the past, to forgive me, Simon, an' to take me for thy true and faithful wife. I would promise to love thee dearly."

With a glad cry he stooped and gathered her into his strong arms.

"No more such words, Hetty. I ha' listened long enough! Not worthy of me, a rough, hard-working farmer—the maid I ha' vowed to be high above all other women!"

He pressed her fondly to his strongly beating heart, saying tenderly, moved in his great joy to an unusual expression of sentiment, "Ah, Hetty, bright sunbeam of my life, that went away so coldly, come to God that last coffee back, bringing warmth to cheer the sad heart of a lonely man and light to set a glow of joy about his quiet home!"

CHAPTER XXIV.

In a remote part of Cragenstone, far from the center of the village, built on a narrow defile that led from the main roadway and almost hidden by a wild growth of bushes and high trees, stood the prison where Margaret Mayland was confined.

It was a primitive little affair roughly of logs, the interior comprising a row of dark cells, a long narrow passageway and a room for the keeper; also a large assembly hall where the village tribunal or council held its sessions. Here it was that they heard disputants, punished offenders and otherwise sat in judgment. So quiet were the inhabitants of this obscure mountain village, so regular in their manner of living, respectful and law abiding, that the jail for lack of serving any use of great importance had long since fallen into a state of neglect. The heavy wooden doors hung loosely on broken hinges, the apertures that emitted air and light into the building were open with a rusty iron grating, and the plain, wooden furniture was dilapidated to an extraordinary degree. In fact, the only part of the old prison that gave evidence of strength or resistance was the huge front door of rough oak beams riveted together with iron bands that reached from floor to roof.

Before this door on the afternoon of the day following Margaret's arrest the old jailer, Matthew Allen, sat on a three legged stool sleepily watching the sun's gradual descent toward the horizon line. His good dog slept quietly at his side, and inside the prison the silence was intense.

Sounds of horse's hoofs pounding the roadway fell on the dull ears of the jailer, who roused himself expectantly, for watching alone before the jail in an isolated part of the village was a monotonous existence even for a plodding man whose thoughts were wont to be nearer heaven than earth, and so the hope of a chance visitor with whom to discuss the exciting events of the previous day caused an expression of unusual intentness to spread over Matthew's countenance as he looked toward the turn. Apparently the sight of the old man was failing, for the rider had appeared before his vision and approached quite a few yards in his direction before he recognized the tall, gray clad form of Josiah Taunston. With noisy clatter the horse and rider advanced, the latter pulling gently in a cloud of dust before the huge door of the jail.

"I give thee good day, Matthew," he said. "How doth fare thy prisoner, the devil's young accomplice? Is she still within there?"

"Yea, master," the man responded seriously. "She is here."

"Thy news is good," Josiah observed. "Methought, perchance, to hear that she had disappeared. Gone up i' the air on a streak o' lightning or in a cloud of smoke, to join the revels of her evil companions."

At this sally he laughed a loud laugh of cruel enjoyment. The jailer looked about him fearfully, calling under his breath for the intercession of the saints.

"How doth thy prisoner conduct herself, Matthew Allen?" Taunston inquired, with curious gloating. "Doth she rave an' curse, tear down her hair an' call on that white livered coxcomb, that quondam lover of hers, to come to her help?"

"My son, her behavior is unusual," he answered, shaking his head from side to side in a way that implied his inability to understand. "She doth sit on the stool quietly, with head bowed an' hands pressed together o'er her heart, or else doth kneel on the floor and rest her head on the side of her bard pallet."

The jailer sighed.

"Twere a sin, good sir, to feel a sympathy for such?" he asked in a trembling voice, uncertainly.

Josiah, who had been leaning over toward the old man familiarly, now sat erect with a sudden motion.

"Matthew Allen," he cried sternly, "keep in mind always that thou doth come under the spell of this woman, under the snare of her devilish wiles. Her tricks are many, I tell thee, an' deep is her art. She doth but play a part to lure thee on! Hast already had a feeling of pity for her? Then beware, Matthew! Keep distant from the charm of her spell, and pray—pray constantly for a speedy deliverance from the sore affliction that hath been visited upon this village."

The jailer paled visibly, and his jaw dropped as with eyes wide open in terror he looked into the dark and menacing countenance of his visitor, who now pompously drew a paper from his belt and with stern majesty proceeded to address the old man.

"Matthew Allen, Keeper of Cragenstone jail, I have here an order from the chief councilor, wherewith signed and sealed, commanding thee to bring the prisoner in thy charge—one Margaret Mayland, accused of witchcraft —before said councilor and council in the priest hall, where they will be assembled on the morrow at the hour of noon."

The jailer took the paper with trembling hands, stammering his surprise that so much haste had been deemed expedient.

"The council, as thou dost know, Matthew, is composed of 'wise men,' he observed, "men who foresee danger and anticipate obstacles that might live in their paths. The prisoner, Margaret, hath a lover abroad known to have vast influence at court. As all the roads and passes are guarded by good Puritans loudly armed, ble only way of escape was by the Sterndorf forest, where he must either die of starvation or become a prey to the hunger of the wolves."

He snapped his fingers indifferently, as if he did not care which. "So our good councilmen, knowing the value of precaution and having fair knowledge of the [illegible] over good, deemed it expedient to set the trial at the earliest hour, an' I warrant thee, Matthew, that if the prisoner is found guilty and condemned to die her execution will follow speedily."

"Doth fear a rescue, master?" the jailer asked, alarm written on his countenance.

"'Tis hard telling what intention was in the man's mind when he left," Taunston replied soberly. "An we were careless enough to let the prisoner lie here a month or so mayhap the popinjay, safely surrounded by armed followers, would ride back to break down the door and bear the witch away. But," as he saw the jailer deepen on the old keeper's face, "rest easy, Matthew, an' have faith in the council."

Having finished his discourse, he turned his horse about.

"One moment stay thee," the jailer cried eagerly, laying a detaining hand on the horse's mane. "An' should this knight find means of escape through the forest and ride back to save his lady, this old prison would offer but poor resistance."

"With so much dispatch will the council seal the woman's fate," Josiah answered sternly, "that unless La Fabienne hath eagle's wings wherewith to speed him on his travels he will arrive too late. Fare thee well, Matthew!"

He started to ride away, then, pulling rein, suddenly brought his animal to a standstill.

"I almost forgot to tell thee," he called over his shoulder, "that the council hath under advisement the matter of sending some other to remain with thee until the day that thy prisoner hath been fried or her doom sealed. God be with thee, Matthew."

Putting spurs to his horse, he rode away, and the keeper, calling his dog, turned the great key in the lock and entered the jail.

The next morning, despite the fact that a heavy mist hung over the mountain and a drizzling rain was falling, the quiet village of Cragenstone presented a scene of unusual activity. From the various houses people were issuing on their way to the council hall, and at the Sign of the Red Heart stern faced Puritans from far distances were arriving constantly, for the story of Margaret's arrest had been passed from mouth to mouth over the mountain, and in those credulous, superstitious times such a sensational event as the trial of a witch was the signal for a general holiday. Shepherds left their flocks, housewives their spinning wheels, the husbandman laid down his plow, and, donning their best attire, they walked or rode to the scene of interest. So all the morning along the roadways and before the various shops in the village groups of newcomers advanced and stood listening with open agape to the startling and fearful tales told them by the townspeople of "the accurst woman's doings" and of her suffering she had caused those that had come under her evil spell.

Precisely at the hour of noon, as the rusty bell in the prison cupola rang out the tidings that the time of Margaret's trial had arrived, the chief councilor and council, accompanied by two judges from Sterndorf renowned on the mountain for their knowledge of the law, made their way through the great concourse of people gathered before the jail. Trembling with excitement, old Matthew threw open the door, and they entered, walking slowly to the council chamber, filled at a respectful distance by the assembled people, who took seats quietly on the rough wooden benches prepared for them.

When all were seated and the clanging of the bell had ceased, the chief councilor rose and called loudly the name of Matthew Allen.

Immediately the jailer appeared at the door.

"Matthew Allen," he said in solemn tones, "I call on thee in the name of the king to produce the woman in thy charge, one Margaret Mayland, before this tribunal. Bring forth the prisoner!"

All eyes were turned toward the entrance.

Amid a breathless silence he resumed his seat.

Presently the grating noise of the opening and shutting of an iron door was heard, then the sounds of footsteps coming along the corridor. All eyes were turned toward the entrance and there was a ripple of excitement and deep interest as the old keeper, leading the prisoner, appeared in the doorway. Eagerly the spectators fixed their curious glances on Margaret, who wore a plain dress of black cloth unrelieved by any color or ornament save the gold cross on her bosom, that shone brightly on its fine gold chain. Her glittering hair, brushed back smoothly, was coiled in a loose knot, and she walked with drooping head, her pale face wearing an expression of suffering and hopeless misery.

Advancing slowly, the jailer finding difficulty in making a way for them through the crowded aisle, until they came to an open space before the council, where Matthew, seating Margaret on a wooden stool placed there for the purpose, left her. So intense was the stillness in the room that the noise of the falling of a pin could have been heard as the assemblage gazed at the prisoner brought face to face with her judges and accusers and who now sat alone and friendless, bending together in her lap, her proud head bent and her blue eyes dull and heavy, their glance cast fixed from the floor.

The chief councilor sat on a bench surrounded by the council, and back of them, seated on wooden stools, were the witnesses and prosecutors. Josiah Taunston, summoned to serve in both capacities, sat with his mother in a place of prominence and received a look of recognition from the curious attention. Seated just before him in the council was one of the visiting judges from Sterndorf, who, after surveying the prisoner for a time with an air of astonishment, turned to Josiah, saying softly:

"By my faith, good sir, the maid is possessed of wondrous beauty and looks not like one that had sold her soul to the devil."

Josiah's face darkened.

"Hist, man! Look not her way, an' put thy thoughts on holy things. To appear winsome is of her evil art; 'tis one of the first tricks she doth use to put folk under her spell. 'Tis well I were here to warn thee, friend."

The man turned about with a frightened expression and, fixing his glance on the audience, kept it there.

Soon the chief councilor, in large curled wig and loose gown of black, rose to his feet.

"Margaret Mayland, rise."

The prisoner, without lifting her eyes, obeyed the command.

"Margaret Mayland," he continued, speaking with stern distinctness, "in the name of the king, thou hath been taken into custody and now brought to trial on the following charges: Connivance with Satan in rebellion against God, possessing a malevolent influence over human beings and supernatural powers to injure them, to read their thoughts, to fascinate and harm by a look or touch, and divers and sundry other ways most wicked to practice the awful crimes of magic, black art and witchcraft. Thine accusers state," he continued, "that already thou hast wrought much suffering to thy neighbors in this village. Woman, hath aught to say in thy defense?"

For the first time Margaret lifted her eyes. "Good sir, of the charges thou dost name I am not guilty," she answered gently.

"Hast thou secured any one to argue in thy defense, to plead for thee?" he demanded.

"Nay, sir."

Her head fell forward, and she clasped her hands together tightly.

"I—I have no friends hereabout, save one old woman, who can do naught but pray for me."

"Thou mayst be seated."

A murmur of deep interest ran through the assemblage as the old councilor said: "Constables, we will proceed with the trial. Let the first witness be called."

He resumed his seat with solemn dignity, while the court crier, bristling with importance, rose at once, calling dramatically, "Josiah Taunston to the witness bench!"

CHAPTER XXV.

As his name was spoken thus loudly and suddenly Taunston turned deathly white, and great beads of perspiration stood out on his forehead. He attempted to rise, but, feeling his legs unsteady under him, resumed his seat; then, controlling himself by a strong effort, again rose and walked with his accustomed air of calm assurance to the bench set apart for the witnesses. The chief councilor addressed him solemnly:

"Josiah Taunston, doth thou promise, knowing that a just and revengeful God heareth all thou wilt say, to speak truth?"

"I do so solemnly promise."

Then a young attorney, who had been appointed by the council to question witnesses, stepped forward, taking a place just before Margaret, who if she heeded what was going on gave no evidence of it, but sat motionless, with lowered head and eyes downcast.

"Josiah Taunston," he commenced rapidly, addressing the witness, "as the accused hath secured no person to defend her or to parley questions with witnesses it will be proper for thee to give for evidence clearly and with as much speed as possible. Witness, what occurrence between thee and the prisoner first caused thee to think she was in communion with the devil?"

After mopping his brow with his handkerchief and wetting his pale lips with his tongue Josiah spoke:

"'Twas on a day soon after Margaret Mayland's return to her estate that I went one morning to fetch my sister, who had been detained by the storm a few days at the house. As I approached from the roadway mine astonished gaze fell upon my sister, usually a maiden of great decorum, running like a wild thing along the top of the pasture wall, whilst the prisoner, with her hair unbound an' streaming i' the wind, swung from tree to tree, laughing an' chattering gleefully as one bewitched. My sharp cry of rebuke brought them to their senses, and, greatly abashed and crestfallen, they advanced quietly to meet me. Hoping for some good influence with my cousin, I entered the house and stopped a short time to remonstrate with her for her unbecoming behavior.

"I also took occasion, as I felt it my duty, to rebuke her for wearing for ornament a pupist cross that always, however, I did request she change in her dress, hung about her neck on a gold chain. I urged upon her the fact that such a decoration was distasteful to all good Puritans and warned her that if she persisted in her headstrong foolishness she would bring upon herself much suspicion an' distrust. Suddenly, as I uttered the words, the chain parted an' fell to the floor, where, in my righteous anger, I grasped it and with a cry of horror, mingled with shrieks an' shrill screams of agony, that I confess disarmed me, I would have thrown it into the fire!"

Here his statement was interrupted by loud murmurs of approval from the audience.

"For the nonce, under her spell, I returned the emblem to her with unwillingness, an' thereupon, greatly discouraged and disheartened in mine endeavors to lead the woman into better ways, I left the house."

He paused a moment for greater effect; then, throwing up his head suddenly, said, with slow emphasis, "At noon, councilmen, with the same hand that held that cross, being innocent of harm and having no thought of evil, I fed my dairy cows sundered many of the animals were lying sick of an unknown disease!"

"Have you a charge, witness?" asked the attorney.

"I charge that the woman is accurst; that the cross she weareth even now so heavily on her bosom is a witch mark that containeth magic to wreak harm to living creatures," he answered harshly.

A glances were fixed on Margaret, who neither moved nor spoke.

"Continue, witness, an thou hast more to say," the chief councilor here interposed.

Josiah again moistened his lips and, with a nervous motion, adjusted the white starched ruff at his throat.

BOYLE & SON, Local Agents, Napanee, Ont.

"One evening somewhat later I' the month at the time of the setting of the sun I was walking through the forest on my way to my home from the village when I encountered this woman most boldly dressed in a gay colored frock cut in an unseemly fashion to expose her arms an' neck, made thus, I wot, to lure men to their destruction, and, pausing before her, with only thoughts for her good in my heart, I attempted to expostulate with her, when of a sudden nethought sparks of fire flashed from her eyes! The name of 'Godfrey' came in a shrill shriek from her lips, an', throwing her arms about me in a fury, she held me as in a vise with the unnatural strength of ten men. For my very life I struggled with her, strange noises sounding about mine ears, confusing me; then there was a loud report as of a burst of thunder, an' I was surrounded by a cloud of smoke that cleared away to show standing before me the form of the woman's accomplice, Sir Godfrey La Fabienne!"

At the sound of that name the prisoner's body swayed as if with suffering, and she cowered slightly, and from the assemblage came cries, hisses and groans.

"At the instant he appeared before my vision," the witness continued in harsh, even tones, "I was felled to the ground by a fearful blow, and when I was able to stagger to my feet both had disappeared. So strange and weird was the incident and so dazed my mind that I' truth I would ha' thought it was all a dream and I had been sleeping had it not been for the strong stench of sulphur an' powder that lay heavy on the air and the stupefying fume in my nostrils and the number o' birds dead and dying that were strewn all about me on the ground."

At the close of this speech the prisoner, amazement and grief depicted on her countenance, raised her eyes to the face of the witness, and a glance that contained the deepest reproach, and the audience gave vent to its repressed excitement by loud whispers and wild gesticulations.

"Josiah Taunston," here interposed the young attorney, "hast thou other evidence against the prisoner?"

"As thou can understand," the witness replied, with a significant shrug of his shoulders, "after that experience I do both fear an' hate an' accomplice a good safe distance to play their havoc in. But I can repeat much evidence of trouble wrought amongst my neighbors," he added eagerly.

BABY'S SLEEP.

One of the first signs that something is wrong with an infant is disturbed sleep. Usually the trouble is with the stomach or bowels. If your little one is cross and restless do not give it an opiate or "soothing" medicine of any kind. All these things are deadly poison, and the sleep they give is unhealthy, unnatural and injurious. Your baby will sleep and let you sleep if you treat it properly. In Baby's Own Tablets there is not an atom of opium or "soothing stuff," and yet by their beneficent, healthy action they give refreshing sleep. They remove the cause, and the result is healthy, refreshing, lifegiving sleep from which the little one awakens fit for the day's play. Mrs. S. Douglas, Pelfieedac, N. B., says, "My baby was troubled with constipation, was restless and uneasy and did not rest well at nights. I gave him Baby's Own Tablets and the change they made was wonderful. They regulated the bowels and he now sleeps well at night." If your dealer does not keep them, Tablets cost 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., and a box will be sent you by mail postpaid.

W. M. S. CONVENTION.

The Napanee District Convention of the W. M. S. was held on October 4th, 5th and 6th, and was one of the best attendance large. The meeting opened at 9.30 a.m., Mrs. Gibson, District Organist, in the chair. The reports from Auxiliaries, Circles and Bands, were very encouraging, followed by an impressive Consecration service. A cordial welcome was given to delegates and visitors, which was of special interest, as the first Methodist conference was held in the Switzerville church in 1826, presided over by Rev. Isaac Hoddick. "Congratulations from Auxiliaries," gave an interesting interchange of ideas and suggestions for practical use in letter ways of work. "Echoes from Branch meeting" reviewed the work of the year, followed by a large increase in finances and members, and a greater zeal for the work. The report on "Systematic and Proportionate giving" was very stimulating, dealing with it as an act of worship practised in Bible times, at God's command, and a privilege and joy. Then followed a profitable talk on "The Christian" which was full of epigramme. The visiting delegates carried away with them a lasting remembrance of the kind hospitality of the ladies of Bethel church. Special music added much to the success of the meeting. So closed the eleventh annual Convention of the Napanee District.

A LESSON TO AUTO SCORCHERS.

(When Mr. John R. Dolley was driving from Robbins' Hill into Napanee, about 9 o'clock, his horse was frightened by an automobile, and ran into the fence on the side of the road. One of the shafts was broken and the horse ran some distance before it was brought under control. The speed of the machine or help him after the accident. The party, Fred. Sagar, owner, and Wm. J. Flagler, of St. Catharines, the driver, were fined that afternoon at Belleville by Chief Orton, and brought to Napanee, arriving at 5 o'clock, their car having run miles an hour, inside the municipality.

Mr. Dolley and his son Malcolm testified that the machine was running at a terrific pace, and that a cloud of dust over half a mile long followed them before it began to settle down.

There seems to be little doubt that the tourists were travelling at a very sharp clip down the hill. They came from Kingston to Napanee in two hours, and as there are several steep hills to climb, and the usual teams take about that time to go up the hill, they must have travelled a good deal faster than twelve miles an hour. Besides how were they passing about two miles down the York road when they met Mr. Dolley at a terrific pace, and that a cloud of dust over half a mile long followed them before it began to settle down.

Energy and strength is instilled into every part of the system. You get well—keep well—nervousness forever departs, because you've used Pyrozone. Price 50c per box of fifty tablets at all dealers.

THE CALLS OF OUR LIFE

THE DIVINE VOICE IS CONSTANTLY SPEAKING TO MANKIND.

HOW WE MAY RECOGNIZE IT

God Generally Calls To the Highest Spiritual Life in the "Silent Places," and It Will Be Well For Us to Answer, as Did Samuel, "Speak, Lord, For Thy Servant Heareth."

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1903, by Frederick Dyer, of Toronto, at the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Oct. 8.—In this sermon the preacher shows how the divine voice is constantly speaking to man and how we may recognize and obey it. The text is I Samuel iii. 9, "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth."

How the mighty men and women of the world found their callings in life would make very interesting reading. Sometimes a genius, like Mozart, is born. From his cradle his parents knew what vocation the child would pursue. At three years of age, with his little chubby fingers, he could make the piano obey the touch of a master. At five years he appeared in public at the University of Salzburg. At six, with his little sister Marianne, he was traveling about Europe on a concert tour. He played at kings' and queens' and the wonder and astonishment of the musical world. But, though Wolfgang Mozart was born to music, most of our great men and women dive years and years and years before they recognize their right sphere in life. Some of them try four or five different lines of work before they place their foot upon the lowest step to mount their thrones of power. Some, like Odysseus, the Homeric hero of the Trojan war, had to be bound hand and foot to the masts of duty, else they would have leaped overboard and followed the false wooing of the siren's song.

George Washington did not wish to be a soldier, but a sailor. A British man-of-war came to Chesapeake Bay when he was a young man. He wanted to enlist. A midshipman's commission was obtained for him by his elder brother Lawrence. His trunk was already packed and placed on board ship. But his mother objected. She would not let her "baby" boy leave her side. For her sake he turned his back upon the quarter-deck of a British warship and thereby paved his way for the wonderful career which has made his name the most famous in American history. Oliver Cromwell wanted to emigrate to America. He and his family were on board ship, and with their tickets in their pockets and had their berths engaged when a royal command forbade him to leave the king's country. Frederick W. Robertson came from a long ancestral line of British officers. He wanted to be a soldier. Indeed, for a time he did wear the soldier's uniform, but physical infirmity made him forego camp life. He entered Edinburgh University. When he became pastor of Trinity Church at Brighton he found his right position, which mightily influenced his own generation and will also influence the fish-speaking race for all time. Thus many of our most famous men and women have been compelled to grope and struggle along, sometimes for years, for their right vocations in life, just the same as you and I have done in the past or may be now doing in the present. Where there is one Mozart who was born a child genius there are a thousand Frederick W. Robertsons whose intellect and material life have developed gradually. First came the seed, then the sprout, then the blossom and then the luscious fruit.

The first calls of the temporal life, as a rule, fall upon unheeding ears. The first calls of the spiritual life in the same way usually fall upon unheeding ears. When God first called to Samuel in the midnight hour, "Samuel, Samuel!" the lad leaped up and ran to the chief priest, Eli, supposing that it was he who called him, and said, "Here am I." Then Eli answered: "My son, I have not called; go back to bed." Again Samuel heard God's voice, and again he mistook it for a human voice. "Samuel, Samuel!" "Here am I!" asked the boy. "Here I am. I am always ready to wait upon thee." Again the old man answered: "My son, I have not called thee." Then a third time God called, and the old priest said at last: "My son, it is not I calling thee, but God. When God calls to thee say, 'Do not speak to me, but answer, 'Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth.'" Thus young Samuel was taught to listen to the voice of the Lord in the midnight hour. Thus I would beg you to heed God's voice when he speaks to you in the "silent places" of life. God generally calls us to our higher spiritual life in the "silent places," as he called Samuel to become the prophet of Israel in the stillness of the midnight darkness.

Where are these "silent places" in which you and I can hear the voice of the Lord? In the first place, I would say that God can speak to us in the hours of darkness. He calls to us as he called Samuel after the first sleep of the night is over, and we suddenly awake and feel that some one is very near to us and speaking. We cannot see him, but we feel him and hear him. We feel his presence and hear him just the same as we used to hear the voice of mother's hand and her kiss and her "Good night, my boy," when we were children and she would come and take a last look at us to see that we were all right before going to bed.

Perhaps the reason why God is able to speak to us so clearly in the early hours of the morning can be explained upon natural grounds. Have you never noticed the fact that most of our friends die about 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning? As Solomon beautifully symbolized it, when was the silver cord loosed or the golden bowl broken or the pitcher broken at the fountain or the wheel broken at the cistern, when you hear most clearly translated? Your brother, how did he go? Your mother said to the nurse, "Nurse, I think I can be better to-night, but if you need me just give a rap upon the floor and I will come up." It seems that you were asleep only a little while when a commotion in the house made you jump out of bed. You rushed to your brother's room. You saw the breathing becoming heavier and heavier. At last the doctor said, "He is gone." You looked at the clock, and you heard it striking, "One, two, three." When did your mother die? At noon? In the evening twilight when the flush of the setting sun was slowly fading away and its ball of fire was sinking behind the western hills? Oh no. You had been awake all night worrying about her. The last relapse came about 2 o'clock in the morning. Her life went out with the coming of the early light and the first glimpse of the dawn. The reason why most people die in the early hours of the morning is because the veil is then long been very far away from us. At that time there is less vitality in the body. Then our physical hold on earthly life is weakest. So my friends, as earth grips us less about 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning let the Holy Spirit grip us closer to Christ. Let these few minutes in the early morning be times of sweet communion with God. When we awaken don't rebuke the Holy Spirit and break the divine spell. Let us then hear old Eli saying: "The Lord would commune with thee. Listen, child; listen, listen to the voice of the Lord."

But the voice of the Lord is heard in the midnight as well as in the darkness, when we are standing upon our feet as well as when we are trampling over the hillsides, or sitting in the study-room, or watching the mad rush of the whirlpool rapids of Niagara Falls, or when we are looking through one of the pyrotechnics of a thunderstorm, or when we watch a bird build her nest, or the wild flowers lift up its cheeks to be kissed by the sunbeams in mountain glen, or when we hear the thrushes pouring their trilling song over the rocks to find a bathing pool in which the feathered songsters can take their morning bath. It is then all places where the voice of the Lord can be heard distinctly speaking to us. It is then we can hear the voice of the Lord in the "silent places" of nature, far away from the habitations of men, and hear it sometimes more distinctly in the streams or sailing ship cutting the waters of the mighty deep, then I believe is the most important time to hear the divine voice speaking under cathedral tower or from pulpit in the village kirk. Yet some people have the boast that for them the lips of nature are absolutely dumb. In fact, on either hear the love of God calling them to the better and the nobler and the higher life.

The rare and the profession of the divine Father's love always speak to me in the "silent places" of nature. Many years ago the Canadian nature sounded for me their divine lessons in one mighty chorus. I stood upon Observatory Point and looked off upon the wonderful Grand canyon of Yellowstone Park. It is one of the most marvellous places of the world. There before you is a valley smooth as the floor of a great cathedral, yet large enough to gather into it one of the nations of the world. From each side of this floor rise two pacphitous basaltic walls over a thousand feet in height, scarred and seamed with battling the elements of the ages, down which at intervals detached rocks thunder, dulling the crash of artillery in the "Valley of Ages," of richest blood red tinge, glitters and sparkles in the evening twilight. From every crevice of fortress seems to loom, on whose watchtower keen-eyed eagles have perched their eyries, from which at stand some one rises and, flying in graceful circles, with sweep of eye reconnoiters the land. Yonder soar up great pillars of basaltic points, from whose heights those artists painted their famous pictures, varied in every hue and tinted with coronets of green foliage. There the river runs in serpentine and graceful windings, slowly awakening from its long her waters into the sea. Then suddenly, like a mad music, she rests herself and takes the bit into her teeth. With foaming flank and wild rose she dashes and makes one grand leap into the dizzy heights of Yellowstone Falls. There, breaking into millions of pearls, she hides herself behind the mists of white, at the foot of which glistens a rainbow, a fitting passementerie to the robe of an angel. And so perfect there is the symmetry of the horizon that you cannot tell where the earth's tears were lost behind curtains of earthly mist or curtains of heavenly cloud.

A scene stupendous, sublime! Here, in the midnight and lit by light of sun! No one spoke. It seemed as though the angel who had once driven the sword of paradise had again unsheathed the sword of fire and cut a deep gash into old Mother Earth deep enough for me to cut her very heart. Then as we stood there my father with his deep voice said, "What a magnificent picture which the nations of the world could be gathered and assembled before the judgment seat of Christ!" And there we all answered. "And what a magnificent place," I said, "for men and women to come and listen to the words, the mercies of the gospel of Jesus Christ! If a sinner would not feel the presence of a living God here he would not feel it anywhere." "Aye," said father, "that's true." As we listened to the voice of God calling out of the silence of Yellowstone Park, so you may hear the divine voice in the "silent places" out in the country hills. You may hear his voice by the moaning sea, in the voices of the woods and in the "silent places" everywhere. Only be prepared to hear it.

MADOLE & WILSON

One of the "silent places" in which we can hear the voice of God speaking to us is in the hushed home after the undertaker has come and robbed us of the father or, mother or wife or husband or prattling child. How still it is! The friends who attended the funeral are all gone. Still, still—everything is still. There was a time when we used to talk about our nerves. We would say, "The doctors tell me I must be quiet." But God knows it is quiet enough now. Why, the old home is so still that there is not the echo of even one light or complete feet. It is so still that you can hear your heart thump and your sobs anguish under your breast. O God, how still it is! Still, still, appallingly still. But, my friends, though the home is so still, if you listen carefully in its silence I think you can hear the voice of God speaking to you. Perhaps to say, I find the "silent places" where we should hear God's voice in the busy noise and bustle and hum of a great city. I find them amid the clanging of the electric cars. I find them in the rumble of the big factories. I find them amid the hilarities of social gatherings as well as in the silence of the death chamber. These awful "silent places" should speak to us to-day in God's name; they should rouse us to the unfulfilled opportunities of Christian work as never before. Let me illustrate my thought by a simple experience of my life which shows how it can be in the world and yet not of it. Many years ago, when a college student, I had an opportunity to deliver a few lectures during my Thanksgiving vacation in old New England. Mother did not want me to go, but I wished to make a beginning in the practice of public speaking as soon as possible. I left my Brooklyn home with a happy heart, but when Thanksgiving Day drew near I became more and more homesick. Oh, how homesick I was! That evening I was in Boston. I walked up and down the streets without a friend. I stood in the depot and saw the happy fathers, with their big bundles on their arms, heading for home. To-morrow was Thanksgiving Day. I saw the young married folks, with their baby and good cheer, taking the grandchildren back to the old homestead. I saw even some who were dressed in black smiling for the sake of others. But, though there was laughter and frolic and family gatherings all around me, I was alone. I was in a "silent place." No one cared for me. No one in all that big city spoke to me except on business. I was in a "silent place." As my mind runs back to those years I say to you, and I say to you, "How many of us are spiritually living in 'silent places'?"

Are your neighbors part of you? Do they gratefully watch you? When you go through the woods not one leaf turns toward you unless you make it turn. Why? The leaves know you not. When you go through the streets of a great city you meet men; you meet hundreds of men; you meet thousands of men. Do they spiritually see you? Are you spiritually in the city and yet not part of it? How many of the men with pass in daily life look up at you with a smile and say, "You helped me to Christ." "You extended to me a hand when I was struggling in the quicksands of a great temptation." "By the noble work of your life you have been a Christian example which has inspired me to lead a Christian life." How many of us in the busy world can say you have known in this city life can speak thus to you? One? Ten? One hundred? Are you spiritually to your friends? Are you spiritually in your neighborhood? Are you spiritually in your business? Are you spiritually to your own home? Did you never realize that a husband and wife could live side by side for years and never know each other in the deeper and in the holier sense? Did you never realize that there can be great "silent places" between brothers and sisters, between parents and children, between children and parents? "Silent places" there are in which people's souls do not commune, and know each other in holy fellowship. My God, can it be that there are spiritual "silent places" between us and the lives of our dear ones? Can it be that there is any mother here who has not talked with her children about Christ? Is there any wife here who has not talked to her husband about Christ? Are there any men or women here who have spiritual "silent places" in which God is calling them to go and work in his vineyard? Will you go and labor for him?

Giant Whale Tows a Steamer.

The whaling steamer Orion, which Captain Balcom and his associates are operating in connection with their modern station at Sechart, on the west coast of Vancouver island, got a fast in an exciting adventure last week, the outcome of which was for two hours in serious peril from the "finback bottom" whale, seventy-nine feet in length, towed the steamer seaward for more than fifteen knots speed.

The whale had been harpooned in the ordinary manner, but was not killed, as usual, the bomb attached to the harpoon failing to explode at the critical instant. As the monster was only wounded and enraged there was nothing else to do but pay out line and play the big fish until it should become exhausted. For hours the whale traveled seaward, towing the steamer. It kept under water the greater part of the time, coming up at quarter hour intervals to blow; and so hard did it pull that the blades of the harpoon loosened in its flesh.

The whale's pace grew steadily less, however, until it finally became the American war he crossed the ocean and took service on Admiral Howell's flagship San Francisco, where he remained two years until the latter vessel was put out of commission. He went out with Admiral Schley on the first contingent, and saw active service in the Boer war. One year later he returned to Africa with the exploration expedition to Hudson Bay and Straits. Returning, he has spent most of his time with the second contingent of Mounted Rifles, and a year ago arrived home on leave. He is a married man, and is dearly loved by all who knew him.

London.

London is a shop and a bank, a gaming hell and a cathedral. Its streets are paved with gold and set with thorns. It is the place for a rich man and the place for a poor man. It is all things and nothing. It is a place of joy and distress. It is a huge paradox. Many things are possible in London that are also impossible. If it so please you, and you possess the ability to do so, you may live not among your fellows, but in some different lives, which will never clash with one another. You may be a millionaire at one time and a priest and a pirate. It is big enough for both of you.—J. H. M. Abbott in The Spectator.

SUFFERING WOMEN

Find Health and Strength in Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

"I consider Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a most marvellous medicine," says Mrs. Alex. Gauthier, of 1 Bleury street, Montreal. "They restored me to health and strength, when I was in a most hopeless condition. I was almost despaired of recovery. My trouble began a few years ago, when I passed through a severe illness, from which I did not regain my accustomed health and strength, though I had the very best medical attendance. I grew paler and grew weaker every day. I was pale and emaciated, had no appetite, could neither sleep nor attend to my household duties. I was almost a burden. It seemed as though my blood had turned to water. My nerves seemed completely shattered. All the time I was under the treatment of a doctor. I did not get any apparent benefit. One day a friend who called to see me, brought me some Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and after a couple of weeks I found that I was gaining in health. And after a couple of weeks I found this as a sign that the pills were helping me. I continued to use them, and by a few weeks more the change in my appearance was positively marvellous, and friends who dropped in to see me could hardly believe it was the same person. I was not much longer until I was completely restored to health. I felt better than I have done for years before. I am, therefore, glad to recommend Dr. Williams' Pills to all sufferers, and especially to all ailing women the fact that they can restore health, as they have done in my case."

Mrs. Gauthier's experience with this medicine is the same as thousands of others. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are the greatest cure for the ailments peculiar to our female sex. The success of Anæmia; all the diseases of indigestion; all forms of nervousness; all cases of sciatica and rheumatism; and all diseases depending upon vitiated blood. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure these troubles, because they actually make new, rich, healthy blood. They don't act upon the bowels, they don't "dope" with mere symptoms, they go right to the root of the trouble and cure through the blood. That's why genuine—substitutes and imitations are sold by the dozen—that the full name, "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People," is printed on the wrapper around the box. Sold by medicine dealers everywhere or sent by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

POTATO ROT.

By Prof. Harrison.

The November 1903 crop bulletin of the Ontario Bureau of Industries states that considerable rot has appeared on potatoes, especially where the crop was grown on heavy soils or on low lying land. The loss from rot is variously estimated at from 20 to 50 per cent. This "rot" is not a fungus disease, but is caused by the soil being too wet at the time the tubers were forming. The skin of the potatoes may or may not be affected, in the former case the base of the stems becomes discolored and dies, and the leaves also wilt and the entire stems fails over, in the latter case the stem is not affected. The fibrous strands in the tuber become bundles of discolored tissue. The cause of the "blight" which particularly affects the leaves, is a fungus and the Bordeaux mixture properly applied has been found to check this disease, but the wet or soft rot cannot be got at. The cause of the "rot" is a bacteria, and a remedy is not known. Spraying with this mixture, because the disease is present in the soil, and spores also breed in the tissues of the potato and so reaches a stage which has a delicate silvery bloom on the cell walls which hold the starch and other contents of the cells together. When these cell walls are destroyed the starch falls apart and the tuber is destroyed.

The Dominion Experimental Farm of the Ontario Agricultural College, which has been in operation for the first time last year, would like to ascertain if the same or various parts of Ontario is similar to the one with which it has been working, and which caused so much damage last year, and hence would like farmers in trouble with this disease to mail an affected potato and state at what time they were troubled with the soft or wet rot last year and to what extent, if any, appeared in the present season's crop.

Mr. and Mrs. Learned have returned home.

THE CLERICAL UNION.

The semi-annual meeting of the Bay of Quinte Clerical Union was held at Picton on the 7th and 8th of October, October 3d and 4th. The following officers were elected for the year: Rural Dean Armstrong and D.D., Rev. Canon Farncomb, Rev. Dr. Langtry and Revs. Castigan, Creggan, Fitzgerald, Sanderson, Scherr, Mercer, Tear, De Fencier and Green. There was a large congregation in the parish church on Monday evening, when Rev. W. F. Fitzgerald preached an excellent and powerful sermon on missionary to-action coming to a man by (1) the Scriptural call; (2) Macconnian cry of heathendom, and (3) the personal commission of the Holy Ghost.

On Wednesday morning there was a celebration of the Holy Eucharist at 8 a.m. and Matins at 10. After matins Rev. Mr. Creighton read a very splendid paper on the Athanasian Creed, which elicited considerable discussion. Adjournment for lunch was then made, after which Rev. Mr. Langtry gave us an interesting resume of the recent general synod. The Bishop's charge followed with an excellent paper on "Recent Attacks on the Fact of the Resurrection."

Rev. T. O. Johnston, Methodist minister of Tamworth, walking over to Picton, en route to fill an appointment, was entertained by Rev. Mr. De Pencier, and given a cordial welcome, he being a most welcome contributor to the discussion on the papers read.

On Thursday the Rural Dean Armstrong to hold the next meeting at Trenton, was cordially accepted.

Rev. Mr. Armstrong himself will read a paper on "The Canons of 1604," and Mr. Armstrage one on "The Names and Titles of Our Lord in the Epistle to the Ephesians." This very profitable meeting ended with the general thanksgiving and benediction.

STARVING IN NAPANEE.

Men and Women who are in Need—Liberal Offer.

There are scores of people in Napanee and vicinity who are starving in the midst of plenty. This is not because they are in need of food, but because they cannot digest the food they eat.

To help these unfortunates our druggists have recently received a large supply of Mi-o-na, the great recent discovery for the cure of stomach troubles.

Mi-o-na is an unusual combination of remedies for the stomach and digestive organs that heretofore have been little known in this country. It soothes and heals the irritated mucous membrane of the stomach, stimulates the solar plexus, and strengthens the nervous system.

One little tablet out of a 50 cent box of Mi-o-na before meals, and you can eat what you like and when you like. You will have no more headaches, backaches, heartburn, or indigestion. Mi-o-na will give you perfect health and strength.

If you cannot obtain Mi-o-na of your druggist, it will be sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price. Write us for advice on your case from a leading stomach specialist who will be sent free. The P. T. Booth Company, Ithaca, N.Y.

WISE AND OTHERWISE.

The woman of the house, who happened to be a little more than slightly disconcerted when she found the kitchen door closed against her, said:

"I haven't any rags to-day," she said.

"I ain't buying rags, ma'am," said Sasmold Story, drawing himself up with offended dignity. "I've got rags to burn. Have ye any old vittles?"

The Demon, Dyspepsia — In olden times it was a popular belief that demons moved invisibly through the ambient air, seeking to enter into men and trouble them. At the present day the demon, dyspepsia, is no longer in some way something inhabiting men, but those, who by careless or unwise living invite him, and once he enters a man it is difficult to dissodge him. He at last finds himself so possessed should know that a valiant friend to do battle for him with that name is Parmelee's Vegetable Pills, which are ever ready for the trial.

"Do you mean to say that young Cubberly kissed you? I didn't think he'd dare do such a thing."

"Well, neither did I. In fact I let him that he didn't dare."

A Magic Pill—Dyspepsia is a foe with which men are constantly grappling but cannot exterminate. Subdued to all appearances vanquished at one, it makes its appearance in another direction. In many the digestive apparatus is as delicate as the mechanism of a watch or scientific instrument in which even a breath of air will make a change. With such persons disorders of the stomach endure from the most trivial causes and cause much suffering. To these Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are recommended as mild and sure.

It's labor, labor, every day,
Through this life we go;
We used to fan the heat away,
And soon we'll shovel snow.

"My dear," said Newed to his young bride that pie, we had for dinner last night?"

"Yes, love," replied his little wife, "I hope it was all right."

"You bet it was," answered the treasurer of the combine. "I haven't had a nightmare like the'deed gave me since I quit eating the pies my mother used to make."

Pleasant as syrup; nothing equals it as a worm medicine; the name is Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator. The greatest worm destroyer of the age.

Duncan Jones—I have been losing a lot of sleep during the past two months.

Friend—Yes; I noticed you hain't been attending church much lately.

Give Holloway's Corn Cure a trial, it removes ten corns from one pair of feet without any pain. What it has done for others it will do again.

A man went into a chemist's shop and bought a bottle of some patent stuff, which was advertised thus:

NO MORE COUGHS.
NO MORE COLDS.
IS 1/2 GALLON BOTTLE.

Three days later he went to the chemist complaining that he still had three stopped up and that he could hardly breathe. "Five drugs are that patent rough mixture," he said.

"Drugs!" said the chemist. "Why, that's an inch rubber solution to put on the tops of motor boots!"

Cholera morbus, cramps and kindred complaints annually make their appearance at the same time as ripe hot weather, green fruit, cucumbers, melons, etc., and many people suffer untold from eating these tempting things, but they need not abstain from them, for Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial and take a few drops in water. It cures the cramps and colics in a remarkable manner, and is sure to check every disturbance of the bowels.

Christian Science Mother — Eleanor, what is the matter?

Christian Science Child—Oh, mamma, I got a terrible error of the mind in my stomach.

Beryl, at the phone —The idea of sensing a kiss by telephone! Do you suppose I want to be fried on my cat?

Jasper, at the other end of the wire —Well, can't you put the receiver to your lips for a moment? — Then.

In "Irish Life and Humor" William Harvey gives an anecdote of the Irishman's readiness in the use of lawyer. "Now, Pat," said the Magistrate to an old offender, "what brought you here again?"

"Two policemen, sor," was the laconic reply.

"Drunk, I suppose?" queried the Magistrate.

"Yis, sor," said Pat, "both o' them."

Once upon an evening dismal,
While I pondered, weak and weary,
Over many a quaint and curious
Volume of forgotten lore—
Ah, she was a scrumptious creature,
Full of longing and desire,
But, alas! I couldn't take her,
For she had been there before—
Before, but I supposed her
Safely married to another,
Married to the one who "adored" her
Only three—and nothing more.

A General Favorite — In every place where introduced Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil has not failed to establish a reputation, showing that the sterling qualities which it possesses are valued everywhere when they become known. It is in general use in Canada and other countries as a household medicine and the demand for it each year shows that it is a favorite wherever used.

"Please listen, madam," begged the tramp, in the sad story of an unfortunate man. Seven years ago I was arrested on a desert island for petit jury. My mates were all drowned, but I was washed ashore safely.

"And you haven't been washed since —I see!" said the lady impatiently.

With a hopeless sigh he turned away.

The burdens that make us groan and sweat;
The troubles that make us fume and fret,
Are the things that haven't happened yet.

SPRAINED HER ANKLE.

"I slipped on an icy step and sprained my right ankle very badly," writes Miss Minnie Burgoyne, of Glenwood. It swelled to a tremendous size and caused me intense pain. I bought my son's Nerviline and got prompt relief; the swelling was reduced, and before long I was able to use my foot." For spraining, swellings, and muscular pains Nerviline is the boss sure remedy. Strong, penetrating, swift to destroy pain—that's Polson's Nerviline. Fifty years in use.

Why allow this filthy disease to poison your system? It drains your strength, ruins digestion, pollutes the breath, makes you repulsive. The one certain cure is "Catarrhozone," it cures because it destroys the cause of the disease, cures every case because it kills the germs that catarrh grows instantly. To get well and stay free from catarrh get Catarrhozone and use it; satisfaction guaranteed.

The Pandora Thermometer

The thermometer on the Pandora range oven means precisely in accuracy to the cook what the square and compass mean to the draftsman. Without the square and compass the draftsman would have to work entirely by guess, just as you do without an accurate and reliable thermometer on your oven. The Pandora thermometer reduces cooking to an exact science. You know precisely how much heat you have and what it will do in a given time. It is one of the small things which makes the Pandora so much different and better than common ranges.

A SEPTEMBER WEDDING.

A happy event took place at Mountain Grove Parsonage, on Sep. 27th, at high noon, it being the marriage of Miss Nellie Haines, of Kemmeo, and Edward Doyle, of Richmond. The Rev. Mr. Smart performed the ceremony. The bride was beautifully gowned in white luster, trimmed with silk, and wore a white hat. She was attended by her sister, Miss Blanche. The groom was becomingly dressed in cream cloth. Mr. F. Doyle, brother of the groom, officiated as best man. Mr. and Mrs. Doyle left on Thursday for Camden East and Napanee. The bride's travelling suit was a very pretty grey voile, with a white basket shape hat. The groom's present to the bride was a gold watch and chain. The friends of Mr. and Mrs. Doyle in this county and in Richmond wish them much happiness through life. They will reside in Kennebec.

WILLIAMS—TURKINGTON.

At the home of the bride, Hopetown, on Wednesday, Oct. 4th, at 8 p.m., the marriage took place of Mary Elizabeth, youngest daughter of Samuel Turkington, Esq., to William Williams, of Marlbank. The ceremony was performed by Rev. T. Perrens Dowell, B.A., Rector of Selby, in the drawing room, which was beautifully decked with flowers, mingled with autumn leaves. The bride looked charming in cream voile and wearing a veil with a wreath of orange blossoms, which was given away by her father. Miss Fannie Carscallen, of Forest Mills, gowned in pale blue voile, acted as bridesmaid. While Mr. David Turkington, brother of the bride, was groomsman. Over one hundred guests attended the wedding. The presents were numerous and tasteful. Mr. and Mrs. Williams left for Manchester, Conn., on a bridal tour, accompanied by the best wishes of their numerous friends.

BAXTER—HEATTIE.

A very pretty wedding took place on Thursday, Oct. 5th, when Miss Annie Baxter, eldest daughter of Mr. Amasa Baxter, of Yarker, was married to Dr. J. Roy Heattie, of Selby. Perry, New York. St. Anthony's Church was most tastefully decorated by the ladies of the congregation for the happy occasion. The altar looked bright in festal attire, with vases of cut flowers, handsome potted palms, lit up with the soft light. Smilax and asparagus fern and of the prayer desk, lectern and pulpit. The choir were in their places and looked smart with bouquets attached to their robes. The organist, Miss Gertrude Connolly, preceding the organ with her usual delicacy, and Mr. F. G. Millar, of Newburgh, accompanied her on the violin in a most graceful and expressive. The old but always new hymn, "The voice that breathed o'er Eden," was sung as a processional by the choir, who, with the rector, preceded the bride, who looked so fair leaning on her father's arm, attended by her bridesmaid, up the centre aisle of the church to the chancel steps, where the bridegroom-elect and his groomsman, Dr. C. Whitney, were in waiting. Here the wedding service was read, after being married, the bride and bridesmaid followed Dr. Heattie and party up to the altar railings, the chair in the sanctuary and the vestry-room, where the wedding service was performed by the Rector. The bridal party then retired to sign the register, and on returning to the chancel, were once more conducted down the centre aisle of the church by the choir and clergyman, and amidst the strains of Lohengrin's wedding march and a shower of confetti from the church tower, they drove to the bride's home, where a reception immediately took place. After the reception the bride and bridegroom took the 5 p.m. train for the West, and other points east, before settling down in New York. The bride's wedding dress was made of white broche, trimmed with Irish lace and white veil. She carried a handsome bouquet of white roses. The bridesmaid, Miss Edith Baxter, wore a navy gown of green voile, trimmed with lace and insertion of green silk, with hat to match, and a handsome shower bouquet of pink roses. The bride's going away dress was of navy blue cheviot hat to match. The ushers, who performed their duties in a most admirable manner, were Messrs. Arthur and H. S. Gilmuehlin, Benjamin, Wilfred Lewis and Judge J. J. Beattie and Mrs. Beattie, and Dr. John Heattie, of Warwick, New York; Mr. Mitchell, of Newburgh, New York; Mr. Mayburney, Dr. George Watters and Miss C. Telford, of New York City; Mr. E. W. Benjamin, Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Benjamin, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Connolly, Miss Gertrude Connolly, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Dolley, Mr. and Mrs. J. Y. Burns, Mr. and Mrs. J. Watt, Dr. and Mrs. Oldham, Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Wintermute, Mr. Harvey Gilbert, Mr. and Mrs. J. Ensart and Miss Ensart, Mr. Stewart, Mr. and Mrs. Richard, Mr. and Mrs. Winter, Mr. Harvey Gilbert, Mr. F. G. Millar, Rev. C. E. S. Radcliffe, Miss Edith Baxter was the bridesmaid, and Dr. George Whitney best man. Everything passed off well. PARISH OF SELBY.

The Harvest Thanksgiving services held throughout this parish on Sunday, Oct. 1st, were well attended and very hearty. The Rev. T. F. Dowell, B.A., preached at all services. The offerings, which amounted to over $30.00, will be applied to the assessment to Domestic and Foreign Missions, and to the general fund of the parish. Great credit is due to those who laboured to make the church so beautiful that day, and also the liberal way in which nearly all responded to the appeal for Domestic and Foreign Missions.

TAMWORTH EAST.

A large number of the young men have gone to various quarters where they are engaging in taking out lumber during the fall and winter season.

Parties are very much in vogue. Those who recently entertained are, Mr. Joe Mouthy, Mr. J. Kearns, Mr. Morrison, Mr. Tyrer and Mr. Kirby, Mr. T. S. Howes and a flying visit at Mr. T. Hinchey's, recently.

Several from here attended the funeral of Mrs. Hinch, Camden East. A deep gloom has been cast over the neighborhood, as the deceased was well known and respected here.

Mr. Michael Kearns, who has been ill, is somewhat worse.

Mr. and Mrs. T. Kearns, Jase, motored after spending a few days at Mount Eagle.

Miss Tyrer and Miss Lampkin, teacher, spent Sunday at Mr. D. Kearns'.

MARGARET ANGLIN

Canada's Successful Young Actress

Miss Margaret Anglin, the popular young Canadian actress, has manifested her individuality on many occasions—and in her portrayal of Camille in Dumas' play she defied the conventions by creating the rôle on new lines, making the heroine a sweet, simple, sincere ingénue, uncontaminated by the atmosphere in which she lived. The actress made a strong defence for her conception of the character and gave chapter and verse from the writer of the play to prove her contention.

Miss Anglin was born in Ottawa in 1876, and here first asserted her individuality by choosing the scene of her débu on earth the hallowed precincts of the House of Parliament, her father at that time being Speaker of the House of Commons. Her early education was at Loretto Abbey, Toronto, and the Convent of the Sacred Heart at Montreal. At the age of seventeen she determined to go on the stage, and went to New York to study at the Empire School of Dramatic Acting, and began to show her ability by her clever character work in two matinées given by the students.

In 1894 she made her professional début at the Academy of Music in New York in Bronson Howard's successful play "Shenandoah." A season of barnstorming and the cares, trials and troubles incident to one-night stands proved of value in giving her a deeper insight into certain phases of life, in lucreasting her repertoire, and in preparing her for her later successes.

In 1896-7 Miss Anglin was the leading lady of James O'Neill's company, made a tour of the United States and Canada and did splendid work as Ophelia in "Hamlet," Virginia in "Virginius," Julie de Montmar in "Richelieu" and Mercedes in "Monte Cristo." The ease and simplicity of her acting and her versatility were again shown in her clever portrayal of Meg in "Lord Chumley," and she rendered even more absolute and secure her place in the hearts of Canadians during her tour through the provinces.

Her brilliant acting in "Mrs. Dane's Defence" and her later work in Mr. Mansfield's company revealed the mellowing and refining of her powers and the broadening of her genius. Through all great acting runs the golden thread of personality, and the natural refinement, culture, sweetness and strength of character of the woman merely finds new expression in the work of the actress. In addition to her dramatic talent of a high order, Miss Anglin is a brilliant musician, speaks French fluently in her calm, clear, charmingly modulated voice, and is a writer of ease and grace.

Entered according to Act of the Parliament of Canada, in the year 1905, by W. C. Mack, at the Department of Agriculture.

NEWBURGH.

One of the heaviest rains of the season fell on Wednesday.

Rev. W. H. Emery, Napanee, preached the Missionary sermon in the Methodist church on Sunday evening, and delighted the large congregation present. During the first anthem the keys of the organ stuck, and to save the situation the pianist ceased playing, and the anthem was finished unaccompanied. The choir confirmed themselves however, in the anthem during the offertory, and sang "Rock of ages, cleft for me," with fine effect. This quee tion of the organ is one the Ladies' Aid should take up. Every time it is use we hear of some accident, and in the air the organ keys stick. The instrument should be kept free so that it is too valuable an organ to lose in this way.

You Have a Friend

Zutoo, the Japanese headache cure, is a friend in deed.

Don't, without a trial, condemn it as something that will hurt you.

Taken when you suspect a headache, it will ward it off. Taken later it will cure the headache in twenty minutes. In every case it will leave you feeling good.

If it does not do all that is claimed for it, then discard it. But don't confound it with the drug cures and condemn it without a trial. That isn't fair to

COMIC OPERA IN KINGSTON.

Elsie Janis is the star of "The Little Duchess," which comes to the Grand Opera House, in Kingston, on Friday, Oct. 20th. From the "Little Elsie" we knew in vaudeville a season or so ago, she has trounced into the first rank of comediennes, New York has placed upon her work the stamp of unanimous approval. Lew Young Lachlaser, the author out of the west and carried everything before her. It was a case of "Veni, vidi, vinci" with Miss Janis—no struggle such as her less talented sisters have endured before success came to them on the "Great White Lane" where the favorable judgment is passed on things theatrical, and values are established for once and all time. Broadway, like Elsie Janis at first sight, appealed her every effort, and in a single night placed her from the slough of vaudeville to the dizzy heights of independent stardom. Her record is not exceptional; others have achieved the same quick recognition, and gone forth that fame and fortune on the road. But Miss Janis is particularly fortunate in the respect that New York "discovered" her while she was still young. She has not secretly, yet, and not until last March did the Gerry Society permit her to appear in New York at all.

THE ARRIVAL OF KITTY.

One of the most promising of this year's new dramatic offerings is David Belasco's production of Norreys and Lee Sawtelle's delightful farcecomedy, "The Arrival of Kitty." The play is said to be one of the brightest and most potent laugh producers that has come since the days of the farces, and in fact it is in some ways like them. There is manifest cleverness in wit and humor though it is entirely new and original in theme and treatment. Mr. Swartout already holds an enviable place among comedy-drama writers of farce comedy in this country through his creation of "Sandy" and several kindred pieces but it is said that he has eclipsed all his former efforts in this piece. Like all former Belasco & Williams productions the festival of Kitty has been given an elaborate production and they have surrounded it with a company of unusual excellence. One of the particularly attractive features of the performance will be a number of bright and clever specialties which will be interspersed. The piece will be presented at the Bijou Opera House, Kingston, on Wednesday evening, November 1st.

MRS. GEORGE BENNETT.

Elizabeth Marshall, wife of Mr. Geo. Bennett, Riverside, West Lake, died on Friday last, 13th Oct., after a short illness and 60 years. She lived in and in the vicinity of Napanee for a number of years and was highly respected by all who had the privilege of her acquaintance. She was an exemplary Christian and bore her illness with patience and resignation, and passed away very peacefully. Besides her husband, she leaves three sons, Thomas, at home; John, York Road, and George, of Gananoque, and one daughter, Mrs. Henry Cark, of Napanee. The funeral took place on Sunday morning, at 10 o'clock. Rev. J. S. White conducted the services at the house and at the cemetery here. Interment in the cemetery at Petawa, with other members of the family.

PARISH OF CAMDEN.

The Rectory,
Camden East, Oct. 12th, 1905

My Dear Parishioners.—

Once again the season of joy and harvest, when we, with one accord, gathered in the harvest, and once more the thought comes to every right-minded person, "What shall I render unto the Lord for all His benefits towards me?" Our answer, generally, is a thanksgiving service, and then the rich feast so appetizable, return nothing to Him Who gives us all we have, and then together to render thanks for the great benefits we have received at His hands.

On Thanksgiving Day, Thursday, October 26th, the opportunity will be given you of showing gratefully and practically that you personally realize that Almighty God is the giver of all good gifts, when the annual Harvest Thanksgiving services will be held, (D.V.) in St. Luke's church, Camden East, at 11 a.m. and 7.30 p.m., and I am delighted to inform you that the Rev. Rural Dean Anderson, Rector of Merrisburg, will preach at both the services. Some years ago he conducted a mission at Camden East, and endeared himself to you all. I ask you to consider it your privilege and duty to attend these services and offer up your heartfelt thanks to God for His bountiful harvest and also for all the other blessings He has showered upon you. And let no one come empty-handed to His service. God demands more of us than mere lip service; He demands an offering also. The dear ones on our beautiful and much admired church have been reduced to $241.22, and if all will go their duly it should be paid off and the church consecrated. I will ask you again to kindly contribute $5.00 and place it in the envelope sent you and in the collection plates in church on Thanksgiving Day, October 26th. There are few in this Parish this year who cannot afford to give $5.00 as a special Thanksgiving offering to God, whilst many could give more.

"Largely thou giv'st, gracious Lord; Largely Thy gifts abound the year round; Freely thou giv'st, and Thy Word is free.

He only who forgets to hoard has learned to live."

Commending You to God's care and blessing, believe me,

Yours faithfully in Christ,
Rev. C. ELWIN S. RADCLIFFE.

A GOOD SUGGESTION.

To the Editor,—

Dear Sir,—I see by your last edition that the Poultry Association has been formed, and was called the Lennox and Addington Poultry Association, but the efficient were all people of the town. The Association is, I think, a step in the right direction, as there is a great room for improvement in the poultry in the county. But in order to make it a county affair, would it not have been better to have got a notice in your paper saying such an organization would be formed, and had a meeting in Napanee on a Saturday, so that the different poultry raisers in the County of Lennox and Addington would find it impossible for many to attend a meeting in Napanee at night, and if the promoters of this organization wish to make a successful County Association, let me suggest that the time and place of their next meeting be changed to the Town Hall, on Saturday Dec. 23rd, at 2 p.m.

I believe there are hundreds of fowls in the county that could make more money if they knew how to properly feed and take care of them. I am much interested in pure bred poultry and believe myself a specialist, and would be got from such an association. Why we might even have a poultry show in the fall.

Yours respectfully,
OUTSIDER.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

THE CURES FOR SEASICKNESS.

The wearing of red spectacles and the use of chewing gum are two favorite remedies against sea-sickness; grave German doctors having discovered that the disorder is due to optic nerves. It is, however, doubtful whether those who are given to jumping hurriedly out of their bunks at night, with the object of getting instantly feeling, will ever appreciate the value of this new remedy. Swinging on one foot, to counter-balance the rolling of the ship is also recommended by those who have tr ed it, have often been hurled on deck, frequently at the cost of serious bruises. Another doctor recommends the "staying" of the abdomen with bandages. But all these remedies are nothing short of empirical for, as a surgeon of the British Admiralty puts it, their is no preventive for sea sickness, and the surest guarantee against is the being the resolute spirit of the patient. "The will of not being sick," says he, "is the most efficient of all the remedies invented to the present day." There could be added to this that the enforced idleness of passengers on board a ship and the dread of the disease are the greatest incentives to the disorder. Hard work, such as that of a sailor, is the greatest cure

ETHICS OF THE PUBLISHING BUSINESS.

"Your home paper never loses interest in you." To this, possibly, you have not given a passing thought.

No matter if you like the newspaper man or if he likes you, if he is true to his profession and publishes a paper for the people he will allow no personal matters or petty spites to interfere with his news-gathering.

He may meet you on a stranger, shake hands with his best friends, chronicles your success and worries wherever you may be, and those who would otherwise forget you are not erased anon remind of your existence by an item from your paper. Others may deceive and defraud you, but your home paper never forgets you.

Possibly you do not deserve decent treatment by the paper, but you get it just the same, and it is should at any time say things to cause your foe to turn the wrong way, study a moment and see if it has not at various times said nice things for which you fail to give it credit.—Portland Oregonian.

THE WITCH OF CRAGENSTONE

...nat would be hearsay evidence and of no value. Thou canst be excused."

Josiah rose and, walking by Margaret with head well up, resumed his seat by his mother.

"Henrietta Taunston to the witness bench!"

A full minute passed, and, as no one moved or came forward in response to this call, all faces were turned in the direction of Hetty Taunston, who, pale faced and weeping, sat by the side of Simon Kempster on one of the benches placed nearest the door.

The court crier looked about him. "Is the witness present?"

"Yea, yea, sir!" came in cries from the audience.

"See thy mother an' Josiah with their eyes turned upon thee in anger, sweet. Thou'd best go," urged Simon, squeezing her small hand encouragingly.

"Twill do thee naught but harm to go against their bidding. See, thy brother's whispering to the questioner now, instructing him mayhap to be easy wi' thee. Go, Hetty. I wot 'twill be better for thee."

At the earnest solicitation of her lover Hetty rose and, making her way slowly through the crowded council room, reached the witness bench, where she stood, oblivious to all the curious glances cast in her direction, regarding Margaret's drooping figure with an expression in her dark eyes of mournful sympathy. Sharply rebuked for her inattention by the chief councilor, Hetty was instructed to be seated, and the young attorney took his place before her.

"Henrietta Taunston," he commenced, with great seriousness, "thou hast been herein summoned as a witness against this woman Margaret Mayland on the representations of thy family that thou didst on several occasions come under the baleful influence of her spell. Hast thou aught to say?"

"Oh, sirs," Hetty faltered tearfully in trembling tones, "although the evidence is awful an' convincing, I cannot bring myself to think ill of Margaret, who was ever most kind to me. I can think of her only as my father's and child-love both dead—alone among her brothers, forsaken in her hour of trouble by the man she loved—oh, how nearly, only one close to her, as I ha' been, could give thee understanding of it."

She began to sob bitterly.

"Have pity on her. If she hath done aught of wrong 'tis of those cross she weareth, on account of a promise, good councilmen, given her by a dying priest, maythap with a view to her greatest good in it. Entreat her to destroy it and let her go away," she cried piteously.

Her brother's face was black as night, and he sat well forward on his seat, glaring at Hetty savagely as if he could strike her words back into her throat. His mother, seeing his agitation, plucked the sleeve of the attorney who stood near her and whispered some instructions in his ear. When she finished he stepped forward sternly, with uplifted hand.

"Enough, Henrietta Taunston! 'Tis not thy place to plead for the prisoner, but to give what evidence thou hast."

"Good sir, as I have promised to tell the truth before God," Hetty sobbed, not daring to look toward her mother or brother, "I have never felt any influences of the evil spells attributed to her, but rather have I received much kindness from sweet Margaret."

"Didst thou not one evening meet this woman—the accused—on the road and pass her by with averted face in obedience to thy mother's command?"

"I did, sir."

"And did she not in her finger stand rigid, fixing her baleful glance upon thee so that thou didst run with all haste to thy home, falling in a fit on the floor at thy brother's feet, where thou didst lie like a creature possessed by the devil, foaming at the mouth and moving convulsively?"

In her excitement Hetty almost rose from her seat.

"Nay, sir, nay," she cried earnestly. "Thou hath a wrong impression obtained from evil tongues. 'Tis true that I met Margaret, but her glance was not baleful, but, oh, sirs," lifting her tearful, supplicating face toward the tribunal, "'twas so sad that my heart hath not stopped aching since with the memory of it! An' before that I was not our meeting that caused my swooning, but the news brought"—

Here Josiah Taunston, unable to control himself any longer, sprang from his seat, white faced and wrathful.

"I do proclaim the witness now to be under the spell of the prisoner," he cried in a loud voice hastily in his desire to stop her further utterances, "who was ever wont to influence my sister easily, and do affirm that she is not responsible for what testimony she giveth."

Immediately there was a great uproar and wild excitement in the council hall. Hetty, frightened at her brother's violence and bewildered by the confusion, rose from her seat, and, while the attorney consulted with the councilmen and Josiah Taunston on the advisability of questioning her further, the witness, regardless of consequences, made her way hastily to Simon Kempster and, sinking into her place by his side, laid her face against his coat sleeve, sobbing bitterly.

The gaping rustics eyed her curiously, entertaining themselves with coarse comments on her evident fondness for her lover and sneers for her sorrow at the prisoner's predicament. Suddenly there was a loud rapping for order. The council, having decided not to recall Hetty, made the fact known, and when all calm was quiet the Widow Dawson, whose child had died of convulsions, was on the witness bench giving an account of that night's experiences.

Time and the constant repetition of this story to the credulous, awe struck people of the community had caused it to lose none of its interest, so that the tale the woman related in a low, distinct voice was supernatural in the extreme and grewsome in its horrible details. The superstitious listeners, eagerly drinking in every word the widow uttered, expressed their sympathy for her and their fear and detestation of the prisoner, who continued through it all to sit silently with bowed head and clasped hands, by giving vent to louder murmurings of anger and cries for vengeance.

Other accusers followed, each with a tale of some harm having befallen her after passing or coming in contact with the young mistress of Mayland farm, so that the afternoon was wearing to a close when the last and most important witness, old Adam Browdie, the goldsmith, was called to give his testimony. The old man, whose grief at the loss of Christopher was deep and sincere and who honestly attributed the lad's tragic death to the supernatural powers of Margaret Mayland, contained in the "accurst cross of gold," told his story minutely, giving every detail from the moment the cross was brought to his little cabin to the end, with streaming eyes and quavering voice, growing stern and tragical as he described the storm, weeping tears of agony as he told of the finding of the body; then, suddenly winding up his long and terrible tale, he fell on his knees and, raising the arms to heaven, called God's vengeance on the prisoner.

As he was led, trembling and exhausted, to his seat loud talking was heard in the audience, those assembled crying at the pale faced prisoner her hatred in their eyes. The chief councilor rapping for order, a silence fell upon the crowded room that lasted, with an occasional interruption, for a long half hour while the tribunal deliberated.

At last the chief councilor rose and, walking with solemn majesty to the railing that separated the council from the audience, addressed the prisoner:

"Margaret Mayland, rise."

With a little fluttering sigh Margaret rose and, raising her eyes, looked into his stern, hard face steadily.

"Woman," he said, "although thou hast denied guilt of the wicked crimes attributed to thee, I do announce that, after a patient hearing of all the awful happenings that have occurred in this hitherto peaceful and God loving community since thine advent here and after having accorded thee a legal trial of much fairness, this tribunal doth find the charges true and doth pronounce thee guilty of the blackest crime on the calendar, allegiance to the devil and rebellion against God. Therefore, Margaret Mayland, even as our Lord hath commanded that the wicked spirits of sinners be burned perpetually after death, so do I, by the king, appointed to sit in judgment of evil doers, with humble prayers for guidance to order wisely, command that at such time as this council now assembled shall designate, thy body, containing this black and evil spirit, also the accurst cross that thou dost so by perverse wickedness persist in wearing on thy bosom, be burned at a stake by the scourge of fire!"

There was a breathless silence in the room while the chief councilor was speaking, the assemblage sitting, white faced and trembling, looking at judge and prisoner.

"Prisoner, hath thou aught to say—any reasons to urge why this sentence should not be pronounced upon thee?"

The fair young mistress of the Mayland farm, who but a week before was so beloved and loving, winsome and happy, now stood alone, broken hearted, forsaken, a mourning figure in her gown of black, looking at the cold, unsympathetic faces of her accusers with sad, appealing eyes.

"Good sirs," she answered slowly, with gentle, impressive solemnity, "an thou would confer a favor on a friendless maid whose every living hour doth bring her naught but heartache and agony, thou would set her death day speedily."

CHAPTER XXVI.

THE mist of the morning had lifted somewhat, and the light drizzle had grown to a steady downpour of rain when, the trial over and the prisoner led back to her cell, the crowd of people in the assembly room began to file slowly out of the door, and so great was the interest and excitement that, despite the dampness of the weather, they stood about the prison in groups, discussing eagerly the scenes they had just witnessed.

"The councilor made short shrift of her, good gossip," one man said to another as they turned in the direction toward home and trudged heavily along the muddy roadway. "Elder Williams was always one for swift justice, but methought he'd give the witch at least a fortnight to make her peace wi' God an' to renounce the devil that hath taken such strong possession of her soul. But on the sixth day, three hours after sunrise! 'Tis quick work, man, as I say, but happen the council hath wise reasons for setting an early time that such as we wot not of."

"Prithee, she hath repented!" his companion cried eagerly. "Didst thou not hear the wench say that every living hour was bitter anguish to her?"

He shook his head gloomily.

"I doubt not but poor Christopher's body, bruised an' bleeding on the rocks, is before her vision constantly, not to mention the Widow Dawson's infant, distorted in dying convulsions. Marry, I misdoubt the councilor did his duty fairly. The prisoner asked for an early day, an' he, knowing of no good use she could be to any living person, did but grant her request."

The other giving an affirmative grunt, they walked a few paces in silence.

"Didst ever hear such screams and shrieks as the old beldame who hath had care of the witch let forth as the councilor did announce the day of the burning? Methought the prisoner winced an' grew even paler as the noisy clamor reached her."

"Yea, friend, I heard them," replied the first speaker, with rough seriousness. "Such eerie sounds could not but go through the stoutest heart. Why, wasn't that led the faithful old dame from the chamber an' put her on her horse?"

"A man by name of Gaston, gossip, the servant of the prisoner's lover, Fablenne, who hath remained at the Mayland farm as helper," some say 'tis kindness, but as the fellow's master left him naught of gold to pay for lodging at the inn an' no one without the countersign can go down the mountain path after the sun is stained at the rocky ledge on the roadway a ha' mile below the village I doubt not—with a horse tough—that he doth make a virtue of necessity."

Still discussing the situation, they passed on, followed by a long stream of stern faced, gray headed men and women, some talking excitedly as they picked their way from stone to stone over the muddy road and others walking in grim silence, with sealed lips, but an expression of triumphant satisfaction at the verdict of the court shining forth on their solemn countenances. Others, reluctant to leave and regardless of the steady fall of rain, stood about the prison door, watching with curious interest the mounting and riding away of the chief councilor and the members of the council.

In obedience to a command from her mother Hetty Taunston, frightened and disheartened at the result of the trial, stood waiting a little distance apart, with Simon Kempster at her side.

"I give thee good day, Hetty," called her friend, Elizabeth Smith, approaching, greatly excited. "Happen I do not see thee before, we'll make sure to stand together at the burning. Although, I wenn, 'twill be a fearsome an' an awful sight, I would not miss it for a bright new gold piece. 'Twill be something to talk of o' nights for years to come."

"I will not go to see my cousin burned," Hetty answered soberly. "By the ha' law I 'ave forced to come today, but unless they drag me there with ropes ahd chains I will not see sweet Margaret burned."

"Oh, fie on thee for a faint heart!" cried the other gayly. "Thou'd best change thy decision," she added as she turned away, "as 'twill be a great day, I do warrant thee."

Soon Mistress Taunston came toward them, talking volubly to the Widow Dawson.

"Such sleepless nights as I ha' spent," she said dolorously, "expecting every moment that lightning would strike the house or some of us be carried off or struck dumb, I could ne'er describe to thee. Hetty, go now and see that thou dost wear a brighter face."

"Aye," agreed the widow, "none know better than I the awful, sleepless nights. God be praised, we've only five more now. The councilor showed rare wisdom an' care of us in appointing so early a day."

"Mayhap the knowledge that La Fablenne is at large," the other said, "caused him to feel that for the ends of justice the prisoner's evil spirit could not be destroyed too speedily."

"Fear not that he will e'er return," the widow exclaimed, with an ugly sneer, tossing her head contemptuously. "Forsooth, an he doth get through the forest with a whole skin, which I much doubt, he will make the dash of this mountain from off his feet forever. 'Tis ever the way of those gallants. I wot all he wanted was her estate. Prithee, good dame," she continued after a moment's silence, "at the prisoner's death do her lands go to the old woman, Elsbeth? Will the rents be allowed to make disposition of her property?"

The countenance of Mistress Taunston clouded darkly as she replied in shrill tones: "Is a witch possessed of devils able to dispose of her property? Hast thou not heard, woman, that in her father's will it is stated and legally witnessed that my son Josiah, in case Margaret dieth without issue, is the next heir to the estate? Fare thee well, Widow Dawson, I must ha' speech with Hetty, who, I see, doth lag behind."

And the dame, to avoid further conversation, abruptly left her companion to continue her way alone.

In those early days, when the belief in witchcraft was universal and people had strong superstitions, an event such as the arrest of Margaret Mayland, followed by her trial and conviction, gave food for much interesting conversation. In the long twilight and after the candles were lighted these simple folk sat about their hearthstones speaking the condemned woman's name in whispers, and if a blind rattled or the wind rose they sat erect, listening nervously, the more timid cowering down in their seats and covering up their faces with their hands.

Every movement of the prisoner during the trial, her words, also those of the councilor, were repeatedly discussed, and they spoke of her suffering at the stake, that was to be the expiation of her sins, with grewsome exultation in their voices and gestures. The men killed lambs and fowl and the women rose at an earlier hour to get the churning out of the way and to do extra baking in anticipation of visitors, for it was known that many Puritans from other settlements would ride to Cragenstone that day.

Old Elsbeth, who had been allowed to see Margaret just once, when she took her a change of clothing, spent her time weeping, wringing her hands and praying to God to save her young mistress from the horrible fate that awaited her.

"Sir Godfrey 'had gold," Gaston would say to her comfortingly, although his own face was downcast and troubled, "an' much can be done with gold. Cheer thee, good mother, and keep in readiness, for who knows but the master 'll return at the head of a great army and carry us all away in triumph from this accurst mountain."

"Ah, lackaday, mine ears are strained wi' listening for the sounds of horses' hoofs," she responded disconsolately, "that never come—oh, woe is me, that never come!"

The host of the inn of the Sign of the Red Heart at this time was the busiest man in the village. Men eager to discuss the sensational and tragic events filled his drinking rooms, and a greater number of idlers than usual loitered in the hallway or hung about the doorstep. Newcomers who had ridden far to the trial and were resolved to remain over to witness the last agonies of the condemned woman filled his house to overflowing, some of them paying four times the value in gold for the privilege of sleeping on straw in the barn, and strangers were coming and going constantly.

One man, tall, with extremely dark, swarthy skin, wearing a broad flapping hat of black felt, a long cloak of rough homespun that reached down to the tops of his hobnailed shoes, with a high collar turned up about his throat and chin, and who walked as if one knee were stiff, leaning heavily on a short cudgel, attracted unusual attention upon his arrival by the bitter animosity he entertained toward the crime of witchcraft. For an hour after he arrived he sat sipping his ale, listening to the conversation of those about him, with low angry mutterings, nodding his head in strong approval and saying under his breath occasionally in gruff, hoarse whispers: "Down with witches, say I. Burn 'em! Burn 'em! They are accurst of God!"

Later, as the innkeeper was standing at the doorway of the barn giving loud orders to the horse boys who were arranging the straw beds for the night, the stranger approached and, addressing the man with the air of one who had important information, said, "Dost know, good host, whom thou hath at thy board?"

"Mean thou the tall man with bent head an' lame leg? Who is he, master?" the host asked curiously.

"'Tis a certain Ezekial Mason, who hath come to us from loyal Puritans at Honeyoke, ten miles below Sterndorf, having the proper password and letting letters of introduction from them to us. The man, it seemeth, hath invented a famous lock that none but he can understand. Once on a door 'twill baffle all human skill to get the thing asunder. He hath shown it to the council, who did so approve of it that they did purchase it at once for our jail door, putting the newcomer in charge of the jail over Matthew Allen, who for such events of importance as are happening at present, prithee, is too old."

As the innkeeper's face expressed interest, Josiah continued with his narrative:

"The letters state that this Ezekial Mason is proficient in the art of building scaffolds for hanging an' hath skill in planting a stake and arranging dry fagots around it to secure a quick burning. They also make mention of the fact that in the several executions yonder below on the south side the mountain, from whence he comes, all were under his direction, and assert that each affair was conducted with order an' dispatch."

"By my faith, methought the stranger had a menacing look an' a cruel, relentless manner," answered the innkeeper, with a shrug. "At the first when he appeared, dust covered an' mud stained, the village lads loitering i' the hallway sprang away and ran out of doors in fear of him. But happen he'll serve the councilmen for their purpose right excellaby," he added.

Taunston strode toward him angrily.

"Call not this Ezekial Mason a cruel man," he cried, "or a fearsome one, but rather with low voice an' reverent manner assert that he is a holy man, chosen by the Lord to do his work. I give thee good day, John."

Taunston walked off with rapid strides, then halted abruptly.

"Thou hadst best come an' settle his reckoning, for I am here to take this good man to the prison."

The innkeeper, laying down a large bundle of straw that he held in his arms, shouted an order to a passing boy, and then solemnly followed Taunston into the house.

SUMMER FURNISHINGS.

Cool Looking and Comfortable Arrangements For Porch and House.

A large degree of comfort in warm weather depends upon the piazza space that is available for fitting up as a sitting room. When the porch opens from a living room the interior furnishings may be used in either place, with a few extra pieces added for one or the other. The most desirable rug for the floor is one that is neutral in color, without regard to its material, whether cotton, jute, cocoa matting, wood fiber or wool.

Awnings or screens are necessary for shutting out too intense sunlight from the porch. They may contribute also to the decoration if selected to harmonize with the coloring of the exterior of the house. The bright, varnished surface of the Japanese screens may be easily altered with two coats of outdoor paint to accord with the house colors.

Furniture for the porch is made in many different designs in willow, reed, rattan, wicker, raffia, matting, rustic work and hickory. Only a few of these, however, can safely be left to the uncertainties of the weather. The living room to present a comfortable appearance during the warm weather should be relieved of all window drapery except a thin lace or muslin that will screen the occupants of the room and soften the glare of light. If these curtains are arranged to slip easily across the pole or rod they may when necessary be swung entirely away from the sash.

Upholstered furniture that must be used during the warm weather should have slip covers of cretonne, art ticking or linen taffets. These materials make a more pleasing covering than the old time plain sail striped linens.

The furniture for the summer living room should correspond to that of the porch, with the addition of lamps, an open fireplace, a writing desk and lounge. Among the lighter makes of furniture the willow has the advantage of a more artistic variety of designs. A new style of tea table is shown in the illustration, an oblong shape in two tiers in the natural color. Its lightness makes it convenient for carrying from the house to the porch or outside upon the lawn.

During the summer an informal arrangement of pictures may take the place of those regularly framed and hung. A set of water color sketches, a number of hunting scenes or the English posters can be easily transported to the country home and grouped against the wall, as suggested by the illustration.—Delineator.

An Inviting Salad.

of the seeds to form a kind of cup shaped receptacle. Season the interior with salt, pepper, oil and vinegar.

Toss some cold, cooked peas in this same dressing and pile them up in the cucumber cups. Stand each little cup on a slice of beet, tomato or a lettuce leaf. Serve with mayonnaise sauce. Any other small vegetable, such as French beans or a macedoine of cooked vegetables, may be used in the same way.

A Great Racer, Maybe.

An automobilist wearing a pair of goggles having two separate lenses for each eye attracted attention on a road house porch, and one man had the courage to ask for an explanation. It was as follows: "Why, you see, when one is driving the way I drive the sand and very small stones are thrown up with great force. If one sails for my eye it may break the first lens, but then is deflected, and the inner lens saves my eyes." The listeners wondered what famous racing man he was and followed him gapingly when he walked to the hotel shed and there cranked up his engine and started away in a seven horsepower runabout.

Wild Flowers of Alaska.

Up in "Seward's Folly, Alaska," as John Burroughs found it, the predominating color of the wild flowers is blue. The wild geranium is blue and tinges the slopes as daisies and buttercups do with us. He speaks of "patches of a most exquisite forgetmenot of pure, delicate blue with yellow center that grew to the height of about a foot. A handful of it looked like something just caught out of the sky above." In another paragraph he speaks of the forgetmenot growing round an Eskimo encampment at Plover bay, within sight of the Siberian coast, that was scarcely an inch high, of deep ultramarine blue, "the deepest, most intense blue I ever saw in a wild flower."

Fish Out of Water.

Many people think that fish when taken out of water die because air has a fatal effect on them. The real reason, however, is that their delicate gill filaments or membranes become dry and stick together, so that no air can can pass between them. Thus they lose the power to imbibe necessary oxygen, and the circulation of their blood stops. The painful gasping of a fish out of water is nature's effort to free the passage through the filaments.

Soft.

"Don't you think the custom of throwing rice at a newly married couple is idiotic?" asked the fluffy haired maid.

"Sure," answered the savage old bachelor. "Mush would be a great deal more appropriate."

THE BELTED PLAID.

This Was the Original Dress of the Scottish Highlander.

The original dress of the highlander was the belted plaid. This was a piece of tartan cloth, two yards wide and four long, which was drawn around the waist in nicely adjusted folds and tightly fastened with a belt. The lower part came down to the knees in much the same manner as the modern kilt, while the upper part was drawn up and adjusted to the left shoulder, so that the right arm might be perfectly free. This upper part was the plaid, which was used as a covering for the shoulders and body in wet weather, and when the use of both arms was required it was fastened across the breast with a brooch, often curiously enriched. A brooch was also used to fasten the plaid on the left shoulder. To attire himself in the belted plaid required on the part of the highlander no small amount of dexterity. The usual way was to lay it on the floor and after carefully arranging the folds to lie down upon it and then buckle it on. The lower end was fastened at the right hip. The utility of such a dress in the highlands is obvious, for the plaid rendered the man indifferent to storms and prepared to pass a night in the open air in the most inclement weather, while the loose undergarment enabled him to wade rivers or ascend mountains with equal ease. It was thus peculiarly adapted for a warrior, the hunter and the shepherd.—London Mail.

A certain venerable archdeacon engaged as a new footman a well-grown raw lad, who had served as stable boy. The first duty which he was called upon to perform was to accompany the archdeacon on a series of formal calls.

"Take the cards, Thomas, and leave one at each house," ordered his master. After two hours of visiting from house to house the archdeacon's list was exhausted.

"This be the last house, Thomas," he said, "leave two cards here."

"Begging your pardon, sir," was the reply, "I can't—I've only the one of 'em."

Napanee's Greatest ...Store.

THE Robinson Co. Store

'Is full of faults, so full that it keeps us humble. But there is no fault left in purposely; and bad as its faults may be, the store is aimed right and is already giving a better service than any store in these par s has given or is giving. When we come to feel that the store is perfect it will stop getting better. May such fate be long deferred.

We expect to make this store a great deal better than it is, but up to the present we are offering for the accomodation of our customers; the largest retail store building hereabouts; facilities for rest and toilet and shopping such as Napanee never had before; facilities for exchanging goods, entering complaints etc., such as never formerly were dreamt of; and a stock to choose from that is the largest any Napanee store ever had within its walls.

This Store Will be Closed all Day Thursday-- October 26th--Thanksgiving Day.

Men's and Boy's Clothing, Neat, Stylish, Well-fitting Garments.

There was a time when neither manufacturer nor retailer had to trouble himself very much about styles in clothing. Almost anything if only cheap enough would do. That day is gone by. Price is still an object but style and fit are indispensable. We are in a position to give you the latest styles and the best fitting garments on the market. We may not have studied and may not be an authority on many things, but we do claim that we know something about clothing. We have studied clothing for many years. What we do is this: every garment we put in stock has had proper care taken in the selection and adjustment of the parts that are not visible to the wearer. A coat to fit well and retain its shape must have an inside that will bear inspection. The hair cloth felt and canvas used in the suits we sell from $10 up to $15 you will find fills the bill entirely, and will hold shape until the suit is worn out. Our cheaper suits, although not containing as good trimmings as the better grades, will yet be found to be superior to others at the price.

OVERCOATS—We have without a doubt an Overcoat in our stock that will please you. There are particularly stylish and characteristic Overcoats here for young men, and quieter patterns as well as plain ones for older men, sizes up to 46. Prices, $5 to $15.

A SPECIAL BLACK SERGE SUIT—We have secured the control of a line of Black Serge Suits that are such a great value we want you to see them. We guarantee it equal to any $15 black Serge Suits on the market. It fits so well and has so much style about it that few can tell it from a made-to-order. The inside as well as the outside workmanship is faultless, "Fashion" brand. Our special price, $12.50.

—Last Monday a young man named George Rosseau, of Deseronto, was so seriously hurt that he later succumbed to his injuries. The unfortunate man was working in the hold of the schooner Isabella Reid, unloading coal. As his bucket ascended it displaced a plank of the scaffold above him, which fell, striking him upon the head, fracturing his skull. Deceased was about thirty-five years of age and unmarried. His home was in Benson Mines, New York, where his body was sent for burial.

—A funny incident occurred in one of our leading hardware stores the other day. A customer sent for a pair of hand cuffs, and upon their arrival two of the clerks were desirous of ascertaining if the "come alongs" were in working order. Each one put on a handcuff and enjoyed the novelty of being "attached to one another." However, a different aspect soon came on the sport a few minutes later when the time arrived for "separation." Instead of saying, "Good-bye My Boy Bill," it was found necessary to unlock the handcuffs. The key had become mislaid, and it was some time before the boys regained their freedom.

COLEBROOK.

Last Wednesday evening at eight o'clock, a quiet house wedding took place at the home of Mrs. J. Biddell, when her daughter, Mrs. Charity Treverley, was united in marriage to Thomas Townsend, Harrowsmith. The ceremony was performed by Rev. E. Farnsworth, in the presence of only the immediate relatives of the bride and bridegroom. Shortly after the ceremony supper was served, which followed by the baptism of little Misses Grace and Beatrice Biddell, nieces of the bride. Mr. and Mrs. Townsend will live during the winter on Mr. Townsend's farm, Harrowsmith Road, but will remove here in spring, to make it their permanent home.

On Friday evening the house occupied by Hiram Lounds was threatened by fire. Almost at the first alarm people flocked with pails of water, and the fire was soon extinguished, but not until the roof, curtains and clothing were badly burned. The fire, it is said, was the second one caused by a lamp.

What might have been a very serious fire happened the next day, when the roof of C. Sutton's house caught fire from the chimney, and was badly burned. The only inmates of the house at the time being an old lady, the fire would soon have been past extinguishing but for the alarm of a passer-by. Help from all parts of the village arrived, and the fire was soon under control.

WERE QUIETLY MARRIED

A marriage which was to have been kept secret, has "leaked out" in Picton, and the couple are being much congratulated. Lester Mollett and Miss Annie Williams were very quietly married in Kingston on Thursday afternoon last; returning to Picton immediately afterwards. The bride is the daughter of ex-warden of Prince Edward county, P. A. Williams, is a talented musician, having for two years past been organist in St. Andrew's church, Picton. The groom is well known in Napanee and has his home now, where he is the proprietor of a large hack and carting business. For four years he served on the United States naval training ship.

YEOMANS—WEESE.

A very happy event took place at the Eastern Methodist parsonage, Napanee, on Oct. 18th, 1905, it being the marriage of Miss Ethel Yeomans and Mr. Wm. Weese, both of Wesleyville. The Rev. W. H. Emsley performed the ceremony in the presence of a few of the most intimate friends of the contracting parties. The bride was prettily attired in navy blue venetian cloth with silk blouse and hat to match. She was assisted by Miss Nettie Weese, of Centreville, sister of the groom, who was dressed in white silk. Mr. Percy Yeomans, brother of the bride, acted as best man. Mr. and Mrs. Weese left for Belleville, Toronto, Niagara and other points west, accompanied by the best wishes of their numerous friends.

AMUSEMENT NOTES.

H. Wilmer Young, the most popular actor that comes to Napanee, assisted by Marjie Adams and a clever company of eighteen people, commenced a three nights' engagement at the Bridge Opera House last night, presenting for the first time in Napanee the popular play of the day, "Nell Gwynne," which is a beautiful production of the play that has been seen here in a long time. The specialties are all good and free from vulgarity.

To-night the merry play in five acts "Nell Gwynne" will be presented with gorgeous costumes said to surpass anything ever attempted at popular prices. The press have said many kind things about Marjie Adams in this play, and it will no doubt prove the theatrical event of the season. There will be a matinee Saturday at 2.30, and Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde will conclude the engagement on Saturday night.

THE MEANEST OF SINS

INGRATITUDE MAY BE FRUITFUL OF THE WORST RESULTS.

THE UPS AND DOWNS OF LIFE

Troubles Forgotten May Affect Us Again In Kind Unless We Cease Practicing the Same Sins That Flung Us Into Our Past and Gone Difficulties—The Trying School of Life.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1905, by Frederick Dewey, at Toronto, at the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Oct. 15.—That ingratitude may be one of the meanest of sins and fruitful of the worst results is shown in this sermon, the preacher taking his text from Genesis xl., 23, "But forgat him."

How soon "the plowman over-taketh the reaper," as the ancient prophet said. How soon after the harvest field glows with the color of ripening grain, ready for cutting and garnering, does the plow come to tear up the rich soil with its ruthless share! How soon the midnight frosts cover the fruits with their cold, clammy death sweat! The favorites of fortune are sometimes rapidly lifted to success, but not so quickly as the victims of misfortune are dragged down to ruin. The stone drops from the highest cliff to the bottom of the deep canyon more swiftly than the powerfully winged eagle soars up and up until he dyes his feathers with the golden pigments of the rising sun. The king's frown and the king's smile may follow each other even more rapidly than the changes of the fickle weather of the spring, which King Solomon described when he said, "And the clouds return after the rain."

Could any lark with a broken pinion fall to the ground more suddenly than Napoleon III. fell from his throne? In 1859 he was considered the most powerful ruler of all Europe. His great uncle's name, his brilliant coup d'etat, which placed him upon the French throne after he had been elected president for ten years; his fostering of the arts in his kingdom; his past military record, circled a halo around the personality and made him "the man of the hour." When the Suez Canal was opened on November 16, 1869, all Europe came to participate in the marriage of the waters of the Mediterranean with the waters of the Red Sea. Many kings and queens, princes and princesses were there, but the royal yacht, which carried on board the beautiful Empress Eugenie, was the centre of all eyes. At that gathering she was the ruler of kings and the queen of queens. No black cloud darkened her horizon. Yet in a little over one year the Napoleonic Solar was broke out. Napoleon III. in a short time was an ex-emperor. Sedan had been fought, the Empire was exchanged for Chiselhurst. Then the only crown of Eugenie was a crown of thorns pressed into her aching forehead. With one mighty crash the Napoleonic dynasty fell into a heap of ruins.

"Poor Empress Eugenie!" you say. Why poor Eugenie? She had no monopoly of trouble. Within the last few months from a throne into exile was a startling fate, but to how many have misfortunes come as quickly and as poignantly? They pounce upon us as swiftly as a hawk darts for his prey. They descend upon us as quickly as they came to Joseph and to the chief baker and the chief butler in the Egyptian prison. Many who have come to us quickly in the past, yet many of an age like the chief butler of Pharaoh's court. As most of our troubles leave us we forget all about them and their wounds. We forget that the same kind of troubles may afflict us again. Thus we go on practicing the same sins that flung us into our past difficulties. Let me draw from this simple Bible story some plain, practical gospel lessons. May you and I not be like the forgetful butler, but like the unforgetful Joseph, who in his prosperity remembered his old father Jacob and his brethren and who in his beautiful, forgiving nature will always remain as one of the most impressive pure and noble types of the life of Jesus Christ.

Like the restored butler are we because, in the first place, we have forgotten the promises we made in our suffering through the struggles of youth. When injustices were practiced upon us, when we were working during the day and studying during the night for an education, when we had to wear shabby clothes and had to bear the sneers and the taunts of the world, what did we then say? "Ah, if I ever succeed in life I will help all the young men and women I can who are in the same predicament as I am." We have succeeded. Are we fulfilling our promises? As successful ministers have we sympathy with young sufferers? As successful doctors have we sympathy with young physicians? As successful merchants have we sympathy with young merchants? As successful contractors have we sympathy with young contractors? No. That is not the general rule. When the doors of Pharaoh's court were opened for us and success was ours, like the chief butler we forgot all about our past promises and the Josephs whom we left behind in prison. We forgot our troubles almost immediately. This statement is true not only of one, but of many, departments of life.

How was it in reference to your college days? Who was the meanest and the most contemptible man in your faculty? Was he the great brained and world-honored Mark Hopkins or Eliphalet Nott or Timothy Dwight or as the boys used to lovingly call him, Jimmy McCosh, who, though the ablest of theologians and metaphysicians, with his north of Ireland brogue, always talked about "the college"? Was he the man who, in a word, had the whole university at his feet? No. The meanest and most contemptible educator in your college faculty was a young tutor. He was just out of college fresh himself. He could not have sympathy with the struggles of college life if any one should have had. He was disliked by his own companions. You learned that from your older brothers who graduated at the college you entered the university. But though that young tutor was just out of college himself and had no time to have sympathy with the boys, yet he spent most of his time spying upon them. He "conditioned" as many as he could at examinations. He asked you the unfair kind of questions in the class room. He had a perfect genius for saying bitter things. He seemed to feel that the chief end of every college tutor was to make the lives of the students just as miserable as possible. Not only that, but outside of the class room he was always roaming around the halls and the grounds and the town to find some delinquent and to report some breaking of the college laws. The chief butler of Pharaoh's court in college life forgets the Josephs whom he has left behind in prison.

What is true in reference to school life is equally true in reference to the factory and the department store. The head of the department who is most cruel and hard-hearted and remorseless to those under him is the man who only a few years ago, groaned and suffered and prayed to God for deliverance under a like treatment. What is true about overseers is true about capitalists. The rich man who is the most cruel in collecting the last dollar, the last cent, owing him and who will stretch the hardest bargain is frequently the man who was once so poor that he knew all the pangs of hunger, all the bereavements of cold, all the horrors that come from facing a flinty-eyed creditor. My friend, where is the chief butler of Pharaoh's court who has not gotten the trials and agonies of the past strangers of life in his dealings with others?

Oh, that we would be more like Joseph and less like the chief butler in our dealings with our fellow men! If you are a man you have without doubt seen that book which is so dear to nearly all boys' hearts, called "Tom Brown at Rugby." There the English author, Thomas Hughes, has given a biography of his early life. He gives an account of the "fag system" of the great English university, the system according to which Dr. Arnold made his name as a reformer throughout all time. The little boys in Hughes' day were not only allowed to be "hazed" by the big boys, but they had to be their servants. They had to carry the water and black the shoes and run the errands of the older students. On bitterly cold nights with their little shivering bodies, they had to crawl in between the sheets of the big boys' beds and warm them, so that they could go to their own beds. They had to do everything the big boys ordered them to do. As Tom, the hero of Rugby Hugh was the same as is the universal law of life. As a rule, the boy who had the hardest time as a fag is the boy was the hardest upon his "fag" when he became a "big boy." In the American boy has not had the big lump come into his throat when he read of the struggles of little Tom Brown? And, oh, the prayer of gratefulness we uttered when the "big boy" of book, that "good boy" Arthur, came to the rescue of little Tom! My friends, cannot we be the "good big boys" of life? All of us have secured our apprenticeships as "fags." We have had our hard times. Shall we not try to make the burdens of the little "fags" about us lighter, as Joseph tried to do, for are we going to be hard upon our fellow men, as was the chief butler who forgot about the troubles of Joseph, who was once his fellow prisoner?

There is a centripetal as well as a centrifugal tendency resulting from the butler of my text ignoring his past misfortunes. The one forgetfulness blinds his eyes and hardens his heart to the sufferings of others. The second forgetfulness blinds his eyes and hardens his heart to the threatening misfortunes which are ahead. Because this chief butler had safely weathered one hurricane on the sea of life he is very apt to forget to look to the seaworthiness of his craft and to feel that from now on there will be nothing but a smooth passage and no threatening storms ahead.

Three days after the interpretation of the chief butler's and the chief baker's dreams in past Joseph had said to the baker "You must die"; to the butler, "You shall be restored as the cup-bearer of the king." We hear the tramp of the soldiers. The warden of the prison enters. He first points to the baker and attempts to him that the king has condemned him and ordered him out to be hanged. To the butler the warden turns and says: "Cup-bearer, thou art free. The king bids thee hasten as his faithful servant to his palace." The interpretation of the two dreams came true. Now, if the chief butler had feared that they might be flung again into prison and suffer the fate of the baker, what would he have done when he was restored in the form of a royal servant? The same as you would do in a similar condition. Methinks I might see him as soon as he goes to his room after the first night's banquet is over. He paces up and down as he says: "I must see that Joseph out of prison; I must have him by my side; I must have this interpreter of dreams here to warn me against any dangers which are ahead. He must keep me from doing wrong again." But, no. That was not the chief butler's way. After the different royal officials had congratulated him he hunted up his gold chalices and looked at their sides. There he sees his own smiling face. Then he said: "Ahs, I am safe! I am safe! No danger now! I am safe forever!" Then in his supposed safety he forgot the warning signals of the past. Perhaps he fell into the same evil ways which he once followed, which evil ways may ultimately have caused his execution, like the baker's. His decomposing flesh may have been eaten by the hyenas and the vultures who banquet off the dead bodies of all Egyptian criminals. My brother, can it be that we are forgetting our past misfortunes? Have we forgotten the awful results of our past sins? Do we forget the patience and the pardon and the love of God, which once rescued us, as the butler was pardoned from death by his royal master?

The misfortunes of the past can be reproduced in our lives if we go on reproducing the evils which once caused the misfortune. The forgetfulness of the butler may be compared to the dyspeptic's forgetfulness of his physical agonies. Nature takes him in hand and flays him with scorpions. By eating what he ought not to eat some night he is nearly dies. He is careful one day, one week, perhaps one month. Then the past sufferings are forgotten. The cravings of a gourmand are satisfied. Another night of horror or perhaps even death is the result. The butler's forgetfulness is like that of the drunkard.

Delirium tremens has gripped him. He imagines serpents are crawling over his bed. Demons, with eyes of burning coals of fire, are glaring at him. Wild beasts, with their angry roar and their glittering white teeth and their lolling red tongues and their sharp claws working convulsively, are springing upon him. But in a few weeks he feels so well and strong that he forgets his past terrors. Another glass of fiery liquid turns his brain into a madhouse. Th butler is like you or me if we forget the past evils which we brought upon ourselves through our past sins. Oh God, teach us never to take our eyes off the awful precipices of temptation over which we have tumbled again and again into the yawning chasms of despair unless it be to raise them in gratitude to the face of our Saviour who, though exalted to the right hand of God, remembers us still. Let us never forget our rescue and our deliverer as the butler forgot Joseph.

In the ingratitude of the chief butler to Joseph duplicated, O man, in your life? You are a successful lawyer. Your income may be ten or twenty thousand dollars a year. You are one of the most honored men in the community. How did you get a start in life? "Oh," you answer with pride, "I started myself. When I came to this city I did not have a friend here. I worked my own way through college. I was a poor farmer's boy. I am a self made man." Are you? Oh, you miserable boaster! You are a counterpart butler of Pharaoh's court. You have forgotten your Joseph. You are no more a self made man than I am. Away back on your father's farm you had an older sister. She was the "pack horse" of the family. She wanted to get an education and go to college, but she could not. She did, however, educate herself enough to become a country schoolteacher. But what she could not do herself she set her heart on your doing. You were her idol. Even then. When you were a little fellow running barefooted about your father's farm, caring more for fishing and playing baseball with the boys than for work, she would call you in and say: "Now, Samuel, you must come and get your lessons. Remember, some day you are going to college. You must study hard. You are to be a great, rich lawyer for sister to be proud of."

You finished your course at the country school. Your father said you must go to work on the farm. "No, father," said she; "Samuel must go to college." "But I cannot afford it." "Well," she said, "I can and I will. I have taught school ever since I was a girl. I have saved up my money for Samuel's college fund. He may work his way, but I must help to say. Your sister did it all. Her money helped pay your way. Her girl friends gave you presents. Have you ever done for her? "Oh," you answer, "I paid her back her money, with interest." Oh, the few dollars you gave her did not cost you anything. I tell you, it cost your sister her very blood. Don't you know that there is such a thing as blood poisoning? Well, your sister has always ready for my meals and I can safely say that it was the overwork due to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are a fortune to the blood. They make new blood that disease cannot resist. So you get the genuine pills, with the full name, "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People," on the wrapper around every box. You can get them from your nearest dealer or by mail, post paid, at 50c a box, or six boxes for $2.50 by writing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

MAKING HOME ATTRACTIVE.

There is nothing that will give a good housekeeper greater satisfaction than a good outfit of useful household articles upon which she can depend in the cleanliness of the home depends. With say two good brooms, one for the carpets, a good hair broom for the floors, a good kitchen broom, a couple of good whisk brooms, a dust pan, a carpet sweeper, a mirror, cornice and feather dusters, a stove brush, a radiator brush, some good hand, bath and nail brushes, a shoe and clothes brushes, whisks, hair and nail bru hes, she has what is absolutely necessary in a well ordered home.

Then there are pails, tubs, wash-boards, clothes-pins, mats, mops, ladders, ch pping bowls, a wringer, clothes horse, basket for the laundry, a carpet sweeper to complete the outfit. The bride who is contemplating furnishing her new home as well as the experienced hou e keeper will find the greatest satisfaction in buying all the necessary articles ready at hand when wanted. Of course the matter of quality is one that should be carefully considered, but combine the greatest economy in the end, and only such articles should be purchased as are branded with the name of an old established firm whose name such as Eeckh, and the dealer should be requested when filling the order to supply only such goods. These articles are handled principally by reliable hardware and housefurnishing stores, and also by up-to-date grocers, as many have made a special branch of by the largest departmental stores.

The name of the maker of a reliable line of such goods is always to be found plainly marked on the handle or label, and the buyer should always insist on having the genuine article.

AS BRIDGET HEARD IT

"A fashionable woman had a bit of statuary bearing the inscription "Kismet." A house maid visiting her asked the waitress about it. "Shure, ma'am, what's the m'anin' of the ritin' on the bottom of this?"

"Oh, you mean 'Kismet,'" replied the mistress.

Bridget was limping painfully when out with her sweetheart a long afterward, and he asked: "What's the matter, Bridget?"

"Faith, I was that careless," "I have the most terrible korna on me kismet."

"Mary Anne, didn't I hear you kiss that policeman in the kitchen last night?"

"I hope not, mum."

"What makes Feck look so worried?"

"He's been contesting his wife's will."

"Why, I didn't know his wife was dead?"

"That's it—she isn't."

October 6th, 1905.
The Council met in special session to take into consideration business in connection with Otter Creek Drainage Work.
The members present were Messrs Chas. Anderson, Reeve, Jas. McKitterick, Manly Jones, Z. A. Grooms, and Fred Sexsmith.
The Reeve presiding. The report of the committee appointed to look after the business of Otter Creek drainage works was read, and laid on the table for discussion.
Moved by Manly Jones and seconded by Z. A. Grooms that the report of the committee (re) Otter Creek Drain be received and adopted and that the committee be authorized to carry out the provisions of said report. Carried.
The report reads as follows:
Richmond, Oct. 4th, 1905.
The Report of the Committee, (re) Otter Creek Drain, humbly sheweth, that whereas a drainage work for works was constructed in the year 1883 under the Municipal Drainage Act, to drain certain lands known as the Otter Creek swamp, one of the provisions of the said By-law being that a ditch be constructed on the road allowance between the 7th and 8th concessions of the said Township of Richmond opposite Lots 10 and 11. The said ditch was so constructed and remained upon what was believed to be the road allowance until the year 1899 when a petition was presented to the Council of the Township of Richmond, under the Survey's Act, asking the said Council to request the Crown Lands Department to resurvey the road allowance opposite Lots 6 to 14 inclusive. The Crown Lands Department granted the request and authorized Mr. W. R. Aylsworth, O. L. S., to make the survey and mark the same with stone monuments and when as in the year 1902 an action was brought by Wm. O'Hare, one of the parties interested in the said drainage works to recover $1,000 damages for the non repair of Drainage Works. The action being tried by the Drainage Referee at Napanee in the spring of 1903, the claim for damages was dismissed by the Referee, but an order of mandamus was issued by the Court, ordering the Township Council to appoint a engineer to repair the drainage works, and also to construct the ditch herein before described upon the road allowance as established by the said survey. The said Mr. Aylsworth. An appeal case was taken to the Court of Appea', the said Court sustained the Referee's findings and dismissed the appeal. In the spring of the present year the matter was placed in the hands of J. W. Evans C. E., to carry out the Judgement of the Court, who made an examination of the Drainge Works, but owing to the extremely wet summer the work was not proceeded with, and whereas upon the 2nd day of October last, a notice of intention to move for an order of Indictment for contempt of Court was served upon the Members of the Council, by O'Hare for neglecting to repair the Drainage works. Now therefore we your committee to whom the matter has been referred—1st, We would recommend that the ditch on the road allowance be constructed along the north side of the said road allowance in accordance with the order of mandamus.
2nd—That all the other ditches be cleaned out properly.
3rd—That the said work be sold by public auction, on Tuesday, October 10th, 1905 in the manner described.
We would also recommend that in consequence of the order of mandamus requiring us remove to the ditch from its present position and place it on the road allowance as determined by the survey of W. R Aylsworth and confirmed by the Crown Lands Department. The digging of the said ditch along the road allowance would obstruct the present Highway, and while not attempting to justify the action of former councils in allowing and obtaining the said survey, which in our opinion has caused all the present trouble, we feel and therefore deem it our duty in order to avoid any further litigation to recommend that all the fences and other obstructions which remain on the road allowance as established by the Crown Lands Department be removed forthwith, all of which is respectfully submitted.

The severest cases are substantiated by many who have used the Pills, and most of them speak highly of their qualities.

IN MEMORIAM—MRS. JAS. HINCH.
Thank God for the faith that teaches when the struggles of life are over We shall rest on our own, our loved ones and shall know them all once more.
What matter though life be dreary
Or the path alone?
If, when the journey be ended,
Heaven we'll know our own?
One of the most pathetic and shocking deaths ever recorded in the town of Camden East, when one of its most respected residents, in the person of Mrs. Jas. Hinch, died unexpectedly. From the midst of life's turmoil and strife she was called suddenly and quietly on the evening of Tuesday, October 3rd, 1905. Her passing away has left a gap that completely stunned, not only her family but the friends around her. In the afternoon she was energetic and happy, complaining of not a little of a pain in her head. This she had never entirely left since her illness in July, but was not thought of late. She had just left the room a repast when she was seized with pain-ful pains in her head. She put her hands to her head, called for help, and before she was dressed help was immediately came, but all that loving and anxious hands could do seemed of no avail and unavailable. Soon the doctor arrived but the sun in its fatal hour had come. What heart rending words to hear that she must leave her family gathered around with tearful and begged and prayed her to open her eyes and speak to them if only to say the last good-bye. But he would not have it her struggle but of this earth in pain and travail, at just fifty-four minutes to seven, and had received the last sad rites of the Holy Catholic Church from Rev. Father Connolly, who was at her dying bedside. The severe pain, to which she was subject, was of an examination by a loving mother in a few short hours to a cold corpse, proved to be an apoplectic stroke. It was indeed a sad day the whole neighborhood to hear of her death. It seemed a thing impossible, especially to those surviving family, but alas! it was true—too true. At 9.00 on Friday her remains were taken to St. Anthony's Church, where a solemn requiem mass was sung for the departed soul. Her remains were then placed in the last vault to await interment on November 3rd. Her funeral procession was the largest ever seen in these parts, there being about one hundred and forty vehicles.
Deceased was a native of Canada, but near Newburgh. She was a staunch supporter of the Roman Catholic faith, and was 54 years and 7 months old. She is survived by a husband and six children to mourn the loss of a loving, kind and sweet wife and mother. The pall bearers were her two brothers in law, Peter Byrnes, and her four sons, John, Peter, Leo and Matthew.
The last sad rites are over
The grave is made
The pure good life is ended,
The heart has ceased to ache;
The flower is now transplanted
To gardens fairer still,
And bowed in deep submission,
We pray for thy soul we love.

Yes there is another burden.
A link in our chain of woe,
Another kind friend of all
From this evil earth must go;
Yes we should feel mourn her,
Let's list to faith and pray,
That God will save him to us
Will her receive this day.

The kindness and attention.
That a family could bestow
The prayers were vain we uttered,
For our mother had to go;
Her spirit has returned
Hath her safely over the sea,
And through thy intercession
Let me unite in eternity.

OUR NEW CHIEF.

Kingston News and Times.

There is a vacancy on the local police force as a result of the appointment of one of its members to a re-sponsible position. At the meeting of the Napanee Council Monday evening, John Graham, of Kingston, was chosen as chief constable in place of J. S. Green who resigned two weeks ago. The position is worth, nominally, $50 a month; $10 in advance of what is paid a first-class constable here. In addition there are perquisites for mileage, etc., in county cases that bring it up in the neighborhood of $900 a year, a substantial increase. The by-law confirming the appointment was also passed by the Council.

The retiring constable has been on the local force for the past seven years and previous to that was a guard in the Penitentiary. During his service as a constable he has done good work, especially in a number of robbery cases, showing patience, diligence and considerable skill in discovering the wrong doers. His absence will be regretted here, but congratulations are extended on his promotion. The people of Napanee should find a capable Chief in their new man.

—A despatch from Melita, Man., last week, gave a glowing account of the crops there. The weather during the past week has been ideal for threshing, and as a result, three-fourths of the threshing is done in this locality. In most cases the yield is up to expectations, an average yield of 22 bushels being a very fair one. Some extra good fields are reported. John Maxwell, seven miles south, threshed 7,003 bushels from 34 acres, an average of 43 bushels, and Mr. Thos. Norris, late of Richmond, who works the farm of A. E. Thompson, M.P.P., had an average of 35 bushels to the acre. Greaves Bros. had an average of 33 bushels. The largest one acre yield we have heard of yet around here was on Mr. James McCoscoll's place, two miles west of here, who had one acre, a potato patch last year, which by actual measurement yielded 63 bushels of No. 2 northern.

A temperance convention was held in the C. M. church Oct. 16th. The main feature was the naming a committee to canvas the Township of Ernestown in order to ascertain who were in favor of local option. It was fully discussed by a number of gentlemen from the adjoining circuits. Rev. Thomas ably filled the chair. Some wished to go pell-mell at it while others thought it advisable to look carefully at the subject from different standpoints, and to ascertain the feeling of the people in regard to it. While the majority are certainly in favor of temperance, still it should be thoughtfully considered as defeat is not pleasant.

FALL PRUNING OF VINES AND BUSH FRUITS.

By H. L. Hutt, B.S.A.

As soon as the leaves are off in the autumn much of the pruning of vine and bush fruits may be done to better advantage than by leaving it till early spring. Much, of course, depends upon the locality. In southern Ontario, where no winter protection of vines and bushes is needed, the pruning may be left till some convenient time during the early spring, but in northern sections, where grapes and tender bushes have to be laid down in the fall and covered with earth or other covering before winter sets in, it is advisable to do the pruning before the covering is necessary.

Currants and gooseberry bushes are so hardy that they need no winter protection, even in the north and they bear fruit so early in the spring that it is well to have them pruned in the fall. It is best to grow them in the bush form, allowing about six canes to the bush. And as the best fruit is borne on wood not more than three years old, it is well to adopt a renewal system of pruning, whereby one-third of the bush is renewed each year. This can be done by cutting out two of the oldest canes each year, and allowing two of the new canes to take their places. In this way the whole bush is renewed in three years. The ends of the new growth should be shortened enough to keep the bush symmetrical.

Raspberries and blackberries have perennial roots but biennial canes; that is, the roots live through a number of years, but the canes die after fruiting at the end of the second season. Some kinds have more or less of an annual fruiting habit; that is, they bear fruit and die in one season. With such bushes, then, the annual pruning consists in cutting out all the canes which have borne fruit. The new canes also should be thinned out so as to leave only six or eight of the best comes to each bush; or if the bushes are grown in the hedge row system they should be cut back varying from three to five feet, depending upon the vigor of the bush.

There are almost as many systems of training the grape vine as there are kinds of grapes, but for northern sections one of the low arm renewal system is best, as this facilitates the laying down and covering of the vines where that is necessary. In any case sections the knuckle of one of the high arm systems is most convenient. Whatever method of training may be adopted, the main object of the annual pruning is to remove all superfluous wood and reduce the vine to just what is sufficient to bear a full crop of fruit. Thirty or forty buds is usually all that is necessary, and these should be evenly distributed over the vine.

DON'TS FOR STOUT WOMEN.

High authority on dress matters offers these suggestions to the stout woman:

Don't wear wide belts.

Don't trim a skirt except at the bottom.

Don't wear a tight fitting coat if you are fat.

Don't wear a sleeve that is full below the elbow.

Don't use frills of any kind on a gown. Use flat trimmings.

Don't wear fluffy things around your face. Let the neck finishing be as flat as possible.

Don't wear bow ties. Wear something small and narrow if you wear any tie at all.

Don't wear an Eton coat. Always have your coat line extend as far below the waist line as possible.

Don't wear a high cut decolletage. Have the low bodice cut to an extremity of decollete, and build up the top with patchy effects to the required height.

SIR ALFRED HARMSWORTH

The Publisher of Thirty-Five Periodicals

The most successful newspaper publisher in the world is Sir Alfred Harmsworth, who owns thirty-five periodicals, seven of which are dailies, in the leading cities of England. He was born in Ireland in 1865, the eldest son of an English barrister, and was destined for the bar, but before he had completed his grammar school course he determined to be an editor, and though sentenced by his father to go to Cambridge, he succeeded in having this sentence reversed.

At seventeen he was installed as editor of one of Sir William Ingram's journals in the office of the "Illustrated London News." Four years later he married, and when twenty-three started his first paper, "Answers," a penny journal of popular information, and the foundation of his present fortune. The publication at once was a small success, but large enough to draw a long breath in, and the first dollars a week he paid in rent was quite an item. The first number sold 12,000 copies; within a year it rose to 48,000, and four months later, by puzzles, schemes, guessing contests, prizes and clever and daring methods of winning publicity unknown to the conservative British press, the circulation rose to nearly three-quarters of a million. When the unappreciative government officials stopped the competitions the battle was already won and victory perched on the Harmsworth banners.

Then followed a long string of minor publications, until, in 1896, he bought the Evening News," a paper with an unsullied record for failure, and by the Midas touch of Harmsworth it was on a paying basis in a few weeks. The next year he started the "Mail," an instant success, which now has the largest circulation of any paper in the world; sells five times as many copies as any other London daily and pays its editor—a man only thirty—a salary of $125,000 a year.

So one in the employ of the firm, which comprises Sir Alfred and his six brothers, works more than five days a week; every one is granted a vacation each year, and if an employé desires to leave England and travel Sir Alfred pays half the expenses.

The Napoleon of journalism owns half a dozen fine country houses besides his magnificent town house in Berkeley Square, and more than a dozen automobiles. He does everything on a large scale, and recently bought a piece of forest land in Newfoundland, half the size of Vermont from which he will make all his paper to be carried to England in his own ships.

Entered according to Act of the Parliament of Canada, in the year 1905, by W. C. Mack, at the Department of Agriculture.

A KING FOR OUR NEW CHIEF.

Kingston Whig.

For one brief half hour, on Friday evening, the quiet routine of the police station was broken and heartiest of good fellowship reigned supreme. All the members of the force, with Magistrate Farrell, and Chief of Police Bailie, were present to give a parting handshake to good old Sam, who has resigned from the force to accept the position as chief of police at Napanee.

Magistrate Farrell read the following address and made the presentation of a handsome gold signet ring: "James J. Graham—Dear Sir:—Having learned that you intend severing your connection with the police force of this city, we, the undersigned members of the force, cannot allow you to depart from the city and so discontinue your relations with them and not give some tangible expression of their regard. For seven years you have been a representative of what we may designate our peace commission, and in all that time you have carried yourself in a most exemplary manner, discharging your varied duties faithfully and zealously, and at the same time as agreeably as to command the respect of all. To the office which you have accepted in Napanee will bring to you new responsibilities, but we know that you are equal to the task, and will succeed, and with experience you will add to your qualifications for every duty and service devolving upon you.

We wish you success in your new sphere of labor and are sure in order to take up the personal regard. It will be a one indication to the people among whom you go that you are a man who can be trusted

THE WITCH OF CRAGENSTONE

CHAPTER XXVII.

THE next day and the next were eventful ones in the history of the quiet little village of Cragenstone. People stopped in the midst of their busy preparations for the witnessing of the awful event now drawing so near to walk to the prison to see the great new lock hanging from an iron band across the door and to gaze with wonder and curiosity at the tall, lame man who strode up and down before the building that confined Margaret Mayland, muttering savagely and uttering curses under his breath. Small boys and idlers hung about him, following him whithersoever he went, and on the last day watched with pale, awe stricken faces the planting of the stake, the piling of the fagots at the foot and all the gruesome preparations for the consuming by fire of the condemned woman.

At last all was in readiness, and the darkness of the night that came before the day set for the execution settled black and dense over the mountain. The village folk, with the idea of rising promptly at the first appearance of the sun, so that they and their children might be dressed and on the scene at the first possible moment, had gone to rest early, so that by o'clock not a light gleamed from the windows of a single house or cabin, not a wayfarer seemed to be on the roadways, and there was an intense stillness on the mountain.

At the jail-old Matthew Allen lay stretched on a wooden bench just inside the huge door, sleeping heavily, although supposed to be awake, alert, on guard, and his prisoner, alone in her narrow cell, her dress of black clinging in somber folds about her slender figure, knelt on the hard floor beside her pallet, her head bowed in her hands. The glimmer from a candle on a stand near at hand fell on the big bright hair and bowed head, showing how impossible to be one of hopeless resignation as she knelt there immovable, to all appearances unconscious.

Soon the sharp noise of the opening and shutting of the great door rang through the quiet prison and the heavy, halting footsteps of Ezekial Mason were heard as he came down the corridor, making his last round to see that all was safe. Reaching Margaret's cell, he paused, and as the rasping sound of the key being turned in the rusty lock of the iron door of her cell fell on her ears the prisoner instinctively bowed her head lower. Then the door was thrown back on its hinges, and for a few seconds there was no sound.

"Margaret Mayland."

She did not raise her head.

"Is it the time?" she asked dully. "Hast mine hour come?"

"Margaret."

She moved, appeared to listen, then lifted her face and looked about her wildly, but saw only the stern jailer, Ezekial Mason.

"Who mocks me?" she cried pitiously. "Who imitates his voice?"

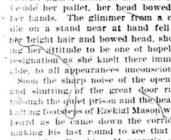
The man stepped over the threshold and with a quick motion removed his clouched hat, turned down the broad coat collar and, supporting the trembling woman to her feet, said with deep emotion:

"Margaret, oh, my love!"

"Godfrey!"

She wound her arms about his neck, clinging to him wildly.

"And is it thou? In my dazed state methought 'twas the cruel jailer!



Hopeless resignation.

Thank God, I see thee once more before I die! Oh, God be praised that thou still doth love me! Godfrey, kiss me and then go, for they will surely take thee!"

Tears were shining in his eyes.

"Kiss thee! Aye, I will kiss thee," he replied. "But not so fast, sweet love, in bidding me begone, for when I go thou goest with me."

She raised bewildered, frightened eyes to his and said:

"Already Elsbeth and our trusty Gaston, disguised as Puritans, mounted and holding two horses under cover of the trees, are waiting for us at the crossroads. As Ezekial Mason I have the password that will let us through the guard, and as Godfrey La Fabienne, he said triumphantly, "I will carry my sweet Margaret safely through the enemy's lines."

He laughed a low, jubilant laugh, delightedly pressing her to his heart.

"But the old Jailer, Matthew Allen? Surely he will hear thee!"

"Nay, sweet," he hastened to reassure her. "Give old Matthew not a care, for a potion slipped into his wine at supper tonight doth cause him to sleep heavily. As I passed just now I kicked him with my foot, and no, unconscious of it was he that he did not even turn."

He lifted the candle so that its gleam fell on her face.

"Thou hast sorrowed, mine own. Thy pale, drawn face doth tell its own tale of suffering."

"Godfrey"—tears filled her eyes and her lips trembled—"methought thou didst desert me and put me from thy heart."

At the recollection of her suffering uncontrollable sobs broke from her in great gasps, and she wept bitterly. With an exclamation La Fabienne drew her closer to him.

"And did I not bid thee trust me?" he asked reproachfully. "Why, sweet, I had thy promise, I suspected that night under the trees yonder at the farm when we were last together and the soldiers came up the roadway, that mayhap my smoking cousin Josiah had laid a trap for me, but, feeling certain I could circumvent him, I cared not to frighten thee. Later at the sign of the Red Heart I found good proof of his perfidy, learning from the officer in command that all the passes were guarded and that I, with thee, was to be arrested the next morning. By heaven, Margaret, behind an iron grating I could not save thee—could but lie there like a wild thing, and for him, unable to rescue thee from thy cousin's awful intriguing. Sweet, for a time the blow was so heavy that I was near bereft of my senses."

He drew a sharp breath.

"The situation that confronted me was so desperate that I fairly sickened. Then I gathered courage, knowing that thou hadst no one but me, and I resolved to escape that night and take what was our one chance, the journey through the forest to Sterndorf, where methought, once there, with bribes of land and gold to hire fellows to ride back with me, till the guards, set on by Josiah, were gone and rescue thee. For two days, desperate, beside myself with a desire to advance, thinking always of thy suffering, I feverishly sat and pushed my way through the dense and gloomy forest, fearful to lie down at night on account of the wild beasts that come from their lairs at nightfall and too eager to get on to rest. Damme, but 'twas a time to make the stutest heart grow faint!"

"On the third morning, when I had drained the last drop from my flask and was in great distress that I might have lost my bearings, methought I heard the sound of a human voice, shrieking in great agony. Drawing my sword, I ran in the direction of the noise and came suddenly upon a man disguised for his life through the eyes brave of a mountain bear. His intent was the animal upon its prey that it did not notice my approach. With one well aimed thrust I ran it through the heart, and the beast sank with a convulsive motion to the ground.

"The man, exhausted and bleeding from many wounds, fell at my side, unconscious of his close proximity to his dead foe and dead to everything about him. Sweet, I stanched his wounds and from a brook near by brought cool water and bathed his head, so that his wandering wits returned. "But the man had received a blow on the head from Monnie Puritan though not he could not live. I saw that he was sinking rapidly, so, kneeling at his side, asked him his name, offering to do for my messages he might wish to leave. To make a long tale short, sweet Margaret, as we have not much time for tarrying, the prostrate man was Monnie Puritan fugitive in the sign

SMITH'S GROCERY.

HOG NOTES.

Keep the pens clean and free from stand odors.

There is no better feed for young pigs than whole oats.

A little charcoal is good for hogs and should be given them occasionally.

Hogs on pasture should have some grain each day to ripen the growth as fast as made.

Always arrange the pens so as to admit of plenty of pure air and sunshine.

A few pigs are often more profitable on the farm than a large number, but every farmer should have a few.

Keep the pigs growing and making frame, but too much fat will tend to check the growth.

If a sow is well fed and cared for she will suckle two litters in a year and keep in good flesh.

When it is possible to avoid it, a brood sow should not be penned up, but have free access to ground and grass.

There is rarely any call for keeping a sow that is troublesome and vicious or one that will destroy her own pigs.

The hog is an animal that requires a liberal amount of water at all seasons of the year, but especially in summer.

Do not make slops take the place of water with the hogs, but give them plenty of water in addition.

Hogs should not be allowed to run in a lot or pasture where there is stagnant water, as such wallows are apt to beget cholera.

Sows are sometimes coupled at six or seven months old, but this practice is likely to produce a puny offspring.

The stock hog should be kept growing all through the summer and be in a condition to be readily fattened in the fall.

It is costly extravagance to allow the hogs to run on grass without other food and become lean and scrawny and then attempt to feed them into a marketable condition on corn alone.

Do not breed the sows too early for fall pigs. September is plenty early for them to be farrowed, and give time to get well started to growing before cold weather sets in.

DEATH OF JOHN L. MURPHY.

Renfrew Journal.

News reached town from Ottawa on Tuesday evening that Mr. John L. Murphy, formerly of Renfrew, had died in the Water Street Hospital that afternoon. Two weeks ago Mr. Murphy had an operation performed for an attack of appendicitis. He seemed to improve during the first week. Last it was only two days or so before his death that his friends here had received word that he was out of danger and his recovery was well within the probabilities, but that next news received was that of his death.

His brother, Mr. C. J. Murphy, and his sister, Mrs. John Costello, went down on receipt of the news to arrange for the funeral.

The deceased leaves a widow and one young child to mourn the untimely death of a husband and father. Mrs. Murphy is a daughter of the late Frederick Quinlan, of Tehkummah, sister to Mr. John Costello. A large circle of friends will deeply sympathize in the keen regret of the bereavement of Mrs. Murphy.

John L. Murphy, the deceased, was a member of the Renfrew Lodge of Shamrocks, a benefit society, according to the Ottawa papers, whose members will pay respect to his remains during the obsequies at Ottawa. Handsome floral decorations were donated by the Union and other friends. Some years ago the late Mr. Murphy was a member of some fraternal societies, but dropped out of these. He, however, received an insurance of $1,000 in an established company, upon which will greatly assist Mrs. Widow and her child.

Deceased was a native of Newburgh, Ont.

A fatal accident occurred at Levis, Que., on Thursday, Oct. 19th, when Mr. H. Henderson, brother-in-law of Mrs. Geo. Gordon, Bridge st., was so seriously injured that death resulted two days later. A freight car loaded with stone in some manner broke loose from the train and crashed into an electric car on which Mr. Henderson was riding. The remains were brought to Napanee on Tuesday and taken to Mr. Gordon's home, the funeral being held on Wednesday to Wilton vault. Deceased was 47 years of age and leaves a widow to mourn his loss. HORSE SENSE REMINDERS.

Don't leave me hitched in my stall at night with a big cob right under my feet to lie down. I am tired and can't select a smooth place.

Don't tempt me to eat more oats than I want by mixing it with my oats. I know better than any other animal how much I need.

Don't think because I go free under the whip I don't get tired. You would not up if under the whip.

Don't think because I am a horse that weeds are the best food in my hay.

Don't whip me when I get frightened along the road, or I will expect it next time and maybe make trouble.

Don't trot me up hill, for I have to carry you and the buggy and myself too. Try it yourself some time. Run up hill with a big load.

Don't keep my stable very dark, for when I go out into the light my eyes are injured.

Don't say "whoa" unless you mean it.

Teach me to step at the word. It may check me if the line breaks, and save a runaway and smash-up.

Don't forget to file my teeth when they get jagged and I cannot chew my food.

When I get lean it may be a sign my teeth want filing.

Don't ask me to back with blinds on. I am afraid to.

Don't run me down a steep hill, for if anything should give way I might break your neck.

Don't put on my blind bridle so that it irritates my eyes, or so as to interfere with my hearing.

Don't forget the old book that is a friend of all the oppressed, that says: "A merciful man is merciful to his beast."

SCHOONER WAS HELPLESS.

The Great Lakes and St. Lawrence company's steamer, John Cressy, Capt. A. Craigie, on passing up the Bay of Fort Dalhousie, reports picking up the schooner Ann Munnes, coal-laden, about ten miles off the Main Duck on Monday night. The schooner was in a helpless condition, with rudder and sails gone. After two or three attempts the Cressy placed her up and towed her to shelter behind the Duck Islands. Shortly after taking her there how the schooner's mainmast went by the board and carried a man overboard with it. The Cressy stopped and rounded to, and those on the Cressy understood the man succeeded in getting aboard the schooner and started again and towed the disabled vessel behind the Duck. Here they left her in safety. Capt. Craigie then learned that the man who went over with the mast was drowned. The night was intensely dark and a high wind blowing, so the poor fellow could neither be seen nor heard.

It is believed that the man drowned was named Peyton, and that he belonged to Picton.

—Mrs. P. Hayes, of Clareview, passed peacefully away on Sunday, the 29th, after a lingering illness. Deceased leaves a husband, three sons and four daughters to mourn her loss. The funeral service was held in the R. C. church, Erinsville, on Tuesday, 17th, and was largely attended.

—Mr. Maxwell of New York City, who has been fishing in Hay Bay for the past three weeks, has captain Bell has made enough so far to his credit. Mr. Maxwell is a genuine fisherman, and has caught tarpon down in Florida, and tuna on the Pacific coast.

KIPLING'S LOOK INTO THE FUTURE

Rudyard Kipling, in November McClure's projects himself into the twenty-first century and flies across the skies from London to Quebec in an airship postal packet. "With the Night Mail" gives Kipling's wonderful constructive imagination free play. With the same art by which he can tell of a liner's engine-room so that you smell the bilge and feel the stuffy, oily heat, he makes the strange highways of the sky, the marvelous machinery and the jolly fellows of the airship service so vividly our own that they grow as familiar as travel experiences of today.

Inside the steel-skin of the packet Kipling has created a new world of statics and mechanics by which she hurls herself along the five-mile lanes at sixteen miles a second, and outside there are strange traffic and new perils above a strangely ordered earth. Human nature only is familiar. The captains of the packet stamped with the cleanfree air of their service might be a new breed of salty Atlantic skippers, perfected but unchastened.

New and undreamed-of perils beset the navigators of the air, and in the brief twelve-hour run Kipling's reporter sees a tramp's crew rescued as their storm-battered hulk hurtles down through space, and feels his ship loom large in the fog-eyes as it shoots through the vortices and blow-outs and electric tempests of the realms of the air. When the sun has topped the curved Atlantic's eastern rim, there is time for a look down on the earth's changed face and for a little gossip of mundane affairs which shows the old world a happy enough place in A.D. 2025.

OLD STOVEPIPES MADE NEW.

The objection to the stovepipe preparations of the past has been that they would burn off and give an unpleasant odor. We have now succeeded in obtaining an article, both in the aluminum and black finish, that will give perfect satisfaction. The Medical Hall—Fred. L. Hooper.

Mark Twain on his last visit to his birthplace—Hannibal, Mo.—told to the school children a true story about a schoolboy.

"This boy," he said, "was born standing very ill. His groans alarmed the household. The doctor was sent for, and came post haste.

"'Well,' said the doctor, as he entered the sickroom, 'what's the matter?'

"'A pain in my side,' said the boy.

"'Any pain, in the head?'

"'No, sir.'

"'Is the right hand stiff?'

"'A little?'

"'How about the right foot?'

"'That's stiff, too.'

"The doctor winked at the boy's mother. 'I'm afraid you're pretty sick. But you'll be able to go to school on Monday.'

"'Is it the case, doctor?' asked the boy.

"'Yes, by Saturday?' said the boy in a vexed tone. 'I thought it was Friday.'

"Half an hour later that boy declared himself healed, and got up. Then they packed him off to school, for it was Friday after all."

—A collision occurred between the strs. Reindeer and Aletha, at Cressy, on Tuesday evening of last week. The Reindeer was lying at the Cressy dock when the Aletha came up over the bay and struck the Reindeer forward of the forward gangway, demolishing the covering board there, six or eight inches, and jolting the boat in such a way that Mrs. Dunlop was thrown in the water between the dock and the Reindeer, but was rescued almost immediately, sustaining no injury other than the wetting and unexpected immersion. The collision will probably be the subject of an official inquiry by the marine department.

QUERY FOR EVERY MAN

"WHAT SHALL I DO WITH JESUS WHO IS CALLED CHRIST?"

"QUESTION OF THE AGES"

Preacher Presses For An Answer That Marks a Distinction Between Real and Nominal Christians — Pilate's Puzzle Easy of Solution in Our Times Because of the Great Amount of Determining Evidence Obtainable.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1905, by Frederick Dixey, of Toronto, at the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Oct. 22.—In this sermon the preacher presses home the great "question of the ages" and makes the distinction between real and nominal Christians. The text is Matthew xxvii., 22: "What shall I do then with Jesus who is called Christ?"

The small, unpretentious house in which Abraham Lincoln died is for the tourist one of the most interesting places in all Washington. The same fascination which draws the sightseer to the tomb of Mount Vernon hovers about the little room in which the first martyr President of the United States breathed his last. There are many Lincoln memorials gathered within the modest house just across the street from Ford's theatre. One of the most interesting is a pile of papers which contain the "Lincoln sermons" which were preached by some 2,000 different ministers in the United States on the Sunday after Lincoln was shot. But if I could take you to-day into a room and show you all the sermons preached upon the death of Abraham Lincoln I could say with truth they are as nothing in number compared to the sermons which have been preached upon the trial and death of Jesus Christ. That event has inspired not only preachers, but artists. Time and again have those terrible events been depicted on the canvas. Probably no artist has succeeded in catching the spirit of the scene as completely as the Bavarian painter Munkacsy. His two pictures, "Christ Before Pilate" and "Christ on Calvary," have made the whole civilized world bow in awe before the sufferings and the death of our Master and Lord.

Most of our older people have seen the original painting called "Christ Before Pilate." It was exhibited from city to city in the United States and placed in museums. Local Conservatory examinations. Special attention given to Elocution. Three Calisthenic Recreation and Teachers Courses.

PRINCIPAL DYER, D.D.,
27 Belleville, Ont.

Most of our older people have seen the original painting called "Christ Before Pilate." It was exhibited from city to city in the United States and placed in museums. Local Conservatory examinations. Special attention given to Elocution. Three Calisthenic Recreation and Teachers Courses. Many people entered the room with silent step. You remember how for hours there stood in front of those wonderful typical faces. There were the long beards and the prominent Hebrew features; there were the Roman soldiers with their supercilious and condemnatory glances; there were the strange looks of others in a quandary as much as to say, "What manner of man is this?" There is Christ, oh, so silent and still! You can hear the surging voices of the multitudes all about him, yet the defendant himself is saying nothing. And above all others is the great central figure of that picture, Pilate himself. It is not here a picture of Pilate before the "judgment seat of Christ," but of Christ before Pilate. What is he to do with this man? Is he to hear Christ's enemies demanding his execution. Here are justice and right pleading for Christ's vindication. When the people commenced to cry, "Barabbas, Barabbas, Barabbas—give us Barabbas!" Pilate turned to them and said, "Whatsehall I do then with Jesus who is called the Christ?" He had to do something with him. He had to either let him go or to crucify him. What Pilate had to do you and I must do. What shall we do then with Jesus who is called Christ?

What are you going to do with Jesus? In the first place, as an intellectual fact? Are you going to shut your eyes to his very existence? Are you going to act as if there never was such a person as Jesus — that there never was a being who came into this world working his miracles and by these miracles proving that he was the Son of God? Are you going to declare there never was a miraculous conception, that there never was any Easter resurrection and that there never was any ascension from Mount Olivet? All these questions are continually facing us and demanding an answer. Is this man guilty or the innocence of defendant before the jury? Can we convict of the guilt or innocence of a condemned murderer is before the governor or pardoning board.

In spite of ourselves the facts of Christ's life are before us, and we must accept or reject the evidence. It starts with his birth. Intelligent men and women as we are, we cannot shut our eyes to the historical facts that surrounding the nativity of Bethlehem if we would. The facts may not have been known to Pilate but in all their impressive significance they confront us. When a young officer at an indigestible table was ridiculing the idea of the divine birth of Christ, Sir Arthur Wellesley, who afterward became Napoleon's conqueror, turned to him and said. "Young man, have you ever read Dr. Paley's 'Evidences of Christianity'? No? Then you had better read it before you parade such evidence of ignorance in reference to Christ's birth as you are doing now." These facts of Christ's birth were accessible to Pilate. There were living in Pilate's time the people who had talked to the wise men from the east. There were those who could have alive who had told Herod that Christ was to be born in Bethlehem of Judaea. There were men who could be produced to confess that this birth of Christ had fulfilled all the predictions of the prophets. Evidences of Christ's birth were living in Pilate's time the people who had talked to the wise men from the east. There were those who could have alive who had told Herod that Christ was to be born in Bethlehem of Judaea. There were men who could be produced to confess that this birth of Christ had fulfilled all the predictions of the prophets. Evidences of Christ's birth are within reach of all. We must, like Pilate, accept Christ's birth as the fulfillment of prophecy, or, like Pilate, we must shut our eyes to the historical facts.

Then the miracles. Pilate may have seen some of the blind men whose eyes Christ had opened, and the dead men whose ears Christ had unstopped, and the lame men whose crooked limbs he had straightened. Christ had raised Lazarus and the boy who was "the only son of his mother and she a widow" whose dead body Christ had resurrected. These living witnesses were in Palestine at the time of Pilate, the same as those who have been miraculously healed of their disease of sin are in the world to-day. The Christ who performed his wonders 1900 years ago is the same Christ who is performing his wonders to-day.

Christ has been able to change the lives of men before our own eyes. We have often seen this change consummated. The painter Rigo some years ago went to the northern part of Africa to paint pictures of the natives there. He took the first model a Nubian warrior just arrived in Cairo. No sooner did the nude native see his head reflected than he produced upon the canvas than he turned and in wild terror fled. He declared the white man had stolen away his head and half of his body and stuck them upon a piece of wood. There was the wonderment of the dusky African at the power of the European artist's brush. But one greater difference to Christ is even greater than that of the Nubian at the powers of a Rigo. We have seen Christ mentally to change men. Before our very eyes he has changed their natures, changed their countenances and changed the whole trend of their lives. He has been working his miracles before us and he worked his miracles in Pilate's time.

We have the authenticated historical facts of Christ's birth. Like Pilate, we have seen with our eyes the miracles which Christ has wrought. Like Pilate, we have had our own evidence of Jesus substantiated and re-confirmed by the testimony of those we love. Our Christian mothers' testimony, our Christian fathers' and wives and children's prayers and prayers have been pleading with us on behalf of Christ as Pilate's wife sent her message to her husband, pleading with him to do him justice.

How shall I describe for you this Oriental scene? We see Pilate standing in the open judgment hall of Jerusalem. The multitudes are in commotion. The suppressed sigh, the muttered oath, the growlings and the murmurings of the people are thrown upon the ears of Pilate to do? Suddenly a messenger bearing a letter forces his way through the crowd. Pilate receives it, reads it, note and reads. It is written by his wife. At once the troubled face of the Roman governor becomes more troubled. There is the well-known handwriting of his loyal and loving wife. The words burn into his soul. She has nothing to do with that just man, for I have suffered many things this day in a dream because of him. That letter practically meant this: "Dear Husband —Do not yield to those clamorous Jews. The man before you must be more than mortal. In my dreams I hear a message from the Prince of eternity. I beg of you to protect him, lest the vengeance of God come upon you. Consider him well. Condemn him not!" Thus with us. By the testimony of our fathers, mothers, wives, husbands, children and friends pleadings are continually going on to-day with us. In great chorus our loved ones' voices seem to be calling: "Condemn him not! Condemn him not! We have had revelations of the power and the divinity of Jesus Christ! Condemn him not!" We cannot shut our eyes to what we have seen. We cannot stop our ears to what we had heard. Neither, like Pilate, can we turn away from the Gethsemane testimonies which are being given by our loved ones concerning Jesus Christ. I ask you now the question which warming and solemnly Pilate asked the Hebrew multitude. "What shall I do then with Jesus who is called Christ?" Do you acknowledge him as the Son of God? "Yea, yea!" you must all answer. "I do! I do! I do!"

Having intelligentally acknowledged Christ as the Son of God the next question is more importunate. What will you do then with Jesus who is called Christ in reference to your life? Are you going to let him rule your mind, your thought and your actions? When Jesus comes to you and says, "I am Jesus—with thee obey me!" are you going to answer: "Yea, Christ, I know that thou art the Son of God, but I cannot, and will not do as thou wouldst have me. I cannot yield my will to thine."

Christ demanded of Pilate the same kind of submission to his will that the Pantician monks are compelled to give to the head of the order. The story is told that many centuries ago a monk refused to obey the commander of their order. By the command of the leader a grave was dug. The refractory monk was placed in a standing position inside the grave. Then by the order of the leader the grave was begun to shovel in the dirt. The dirt came to the ankle, to the knee, to the hip. "Are you dead yet?" called the Pantician. "Is your self will broken? Do you yield to my will?" The monk, with set jaw and sullen look, refused to yield. Higher and higher came the soil, now to the stomach, now to the chest, now to the shoulder. But still the refractory monk refused to yield. At last the dirt came to the lip and to the nostril. "Do you yield?" cried St. Francis. "Is your self will dead?" One shovel more and death was to be his. Ay, and then the stubborn will broke, and the monk lifted up his beseeching eyes and, with tremulous lip, called: "Father, I am dead. My self will is dead. I yield! I yield!" So Christ demands not only for us to yield to his will, but to his intelligences, but king of our wills. We must submit our will to his will. We must obey him even as the Franciscan monks obey their leaders.

We must acknowledge Christ as king of the entire will. We have more reason to do so than had Pilate, though he conceded more than some of us are doing. In the first place, he yielded his will to Christ enough for a little while to defy the Hebrew mob. Then, in the next place, he tried to save Christ by a subterfuge. He placed alongside of Jesus one of the worst criminals of the east, and then he said: "According to the law, I must pardon one of these criminals. Which shall it be?" He did this with the hope that the people would let him pardon Christ. Then when all means failed he took a basin of water and washed his hands before the people as he said: "I am innocent of the blood of this just person. See ye to it!" Ah, yes, Pilate did much to save Christ, but he did not do enough. With one word he could have said, "Jesus, thou Christ, thou shalt have been free. He yielded his will to the divine will — one-eighth, one-fourth, one-third, one-half, but he did not yield all. "What will you do then with Jesus who is called Christ?" In every department of life will you give to him complete obedience?

Would that Pilate could have realized that in full submission to Christ he would have found his own safety! I read the story of the little child of a switchman on one of the German railroads. The fast mail was rushing down the track. The switchman at his post reached out a switch to divert clear track. Suddenly, to the father's horror, the man saw his little boy rolling upon the rails. The father dared not throw the lever back. It would have meant the death of hundreds of persons. His own boy must be killed rather than that others should perish: So the father cried out to the child: "Lie down! Lie flat down!" The boy dropped. The great engine and its coaches swept past. Then it was found that, because the boy absolutely yielded his will to his father's and lay down flat upon the ground, his life was saved. Oh, that Pilate had obeyed his divine Father's commands as the little child obeyed his earthly parent! Would that we could surrender all our wills to God's will! Pilate's half-way attempts to rescue Jesus did no good. Pilate should have been man enough to have done all he was, no matter what the temporary cost might have been. He should have firmly said: "Jesus, thou Son of God, thou art free. I, the governor, decree it."

But to yield our wills to Christ's control entirely there is another question which I would put, "What are you going to do with Jesus who is called Christ in reference to your affections or your heart's loving power?" To be obedient to Christ is not necessarily to be a loving disciple of Christ. There is many a clerk in a store who tries to be obedient and faithful to his employer's interest who personally has no more use for his employer than a weasel has for a rat or a mongoose for a hissing cobra. There is many a woman to-day trying to be a true and dutiful wife who years ago lost all love for her husband. That husband has again and again broken every one of his marriage vows. She is true to him for her children's sake alone. Thus I believe there are many men trying to obey Christ, and yet they are disciples who have not learned to love Christ.

Pilot, in one sense, was trying to serve Christ, but Pilate did not love Jesus any more than some of us love him who have been trying to follow him for years. Why are you a Christian? Why do you go to church and always contribute to the cause? Is it from a sense of duty? Is it because you have your name enrolled upon the church books? "For two reason," you reply answer. "When I was a little child, my mother used my blood supplies. Any one who can make such a woman throughout Canada Dodd's Kidney Pills. A WOMAN'S HEALTH

DEPENDS UPON THE RICHNESS AND REGULARITY OF HER BLOOD.

A woman needs a blood medicine regularly just because she is a woman. From maturity to middle age she is subject to many ills that a man never knows. Her whole health depends upon her blood. Its richness and its regularity. If her blood is poor and irregular, she is weak, languid, pale and nervous. If her blood is irregular she suffers untold torture from headaches, backaches and nervousness. Here is a simple, sensible disease which would not exist if women knew how to prevent it. A Brooklyn public school teacher says that she once required a pupil to compose a sentence with the word "stigma" as the subject. The pupil, in but of ten, after some deliberation, submitted his effort. It read as follows, "The dogma has five pups."

WISE AND OTHERWISE.

The Minister—And does your papa give grace at the table, too?

Angel Child—Yes, sir, but he don't say it like you do.

The Minister—What does he say?

Angel Child—He says down an' asks almost all says, Good Lord, what a dinner!

A Pleasant Medicine.—There are some pills which raise no other purgative than to regret painful internal disturbances in the patient, leading to bad troubles and generally rather than strengthening them. One might as well swallow some corrosive poison. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills have not this disagreeable and injurious property. They merely act as a tonic, are not unpleasant to the taste, and are mild and thorough in their action, as all of them will prove this. They only cost a trifle to try dyspeptic.

A colored undertaker recently was requested to embalm the body of a colored man. The wife of the deceased asked what the cost would be. He named his usual charge, to which she quickly replied:

"I think that's too much."

"Why, sah, dat's de regular fee," protested the undertaker.

That may be," asserted the widow, but I think it ain't a regular corpse. My husband had a wooden leg."

Great Things from Little Causes Grow.—It takes very little to derange the stomach, and many people suffer slight, a cold, something eaten or drank, anxiety is sufficient to cause serious disorder. But if precautions are not taken, this simple error may lead to serious consequences. Many a chronically debilitated constitution can say over the regretful words, "If I had only used Cook's Cotton Root Compound when I first felt the need of it, how much misery I might have been spared." Ladies can also with all safety use Cook's Cotton Root Compound. Sold in two degrees of strength, No. 1 and No. 2, the latter being prepared for special cases. Ask your druggist for Cook's Cotton Root Compound, take no substitute or imitation. Price, No. 1, $1 per box; No. 2, $3 per box. Sold by all druggists in Canada. Write for pamphlet. The Cook Medicine Co., Windsor, Ont.

"What has made the cowards Mrs. Embogue so angry?"

"In writing up the church fair which she made such a success she referred to certain acts of her that she was a woman of wonderful faith."

The seat of Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator will continue to be used as long as worm medicine is required by children and see if it does not please you.

"I wish you would stop at the mine, Henry, and get me a pound of assorted filling."

"You mean that little blonde? She certainly is a peach! Of course I'll stop."

"No, you'll not stop, Mr. James."

Hard and soft corns cannot withstand Holloway's Corn Cure. It is effectual every time. Get a bottle at once and be happy.

Employer—Have you engaged you yesterday and you've been asleep ever since.

New Boy—Well, here's your advertisement (reads) "Boy wanted, must be quick on the pertickes."

Some persons have periodical attacks of Canadian cholera, dysentery or diarrhoea, and have to use great precautions to avoid the disease. Change of water, eating and green fruit, is sure to bring on the attacks. To such persons we recommend Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial as being the best medicine in the market for all summer complaints. If a few drops are taken in water when the symptoms are noticed no further trouble will be experienced.

Here is the latest automobile story: A physician started for a model insane asylum and set apart one ward especially for crazy magnates and chauffeurs. Taking a friend through the building he pointed out with particular pride the automobile ward and called attention to the splendid padding and engineering equipment.

"But," said the friend, "the place is empty; I don't see any patients."

"Oh," replied the host, "we don't open fixing the slate," explained the physician.

Nip Disease in the Bud.—It is difficult to eradicate a disease after it has become settled in the system, but to take any ailment in its initial stages and by such remedies as Parmelee's Vegetable Pills is easy. Cold is the commenced complaint of many, and where neglected to other more serious results. Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil will cure the severest cold or most violent cough.

"Where's that funny cap with the ear flaps you had on yesterday, Willie?"

"Well, sir, I haven't worn it sin' the accident."

"What accident was that, Donald?"

"A chinfinkan asked me if he had a dime, an' I didna hear him."

Nell—Of course, she's not pretty, but it's remarkable how her face lights up when she talks.

Bell—Ah, that's not so remarkable. She's got a lantern jaw.

Little Willie—Papa, why does the railway company have those cases with the axe and saw in everyone?"

Father—I presume they are put in to use in case any one wants to open a window."

"You've put too much baking powder in these biscuits," said Mr. Youngclove, "I just know it," said his wife, testily, "they don't taste good, but don't they look perfectly lovely?"

good land. A branch road east from there in the direction of Regular Butte is now built for forty miles. The promise to be a great country between Lacombe and Prince Albert, Alberta has 700 people and one village, a saw mill, some good stores. The timber cut into lumber is composed of cottonwood and spruce. Going on to Wetaskiwin, passing a small village called Hobbema and the Indian Reserve. We find Wetaskiwin a place having seven elevators, 2,500 people, buildings good; and fair, but one-third under cultivation, and a branch road now built out some five miles in a good country. Passing another village called Millet. The soil appears sandy here but quite fertile. Leduc has three elevators; land good; Population 300. Clearwater, another place, six miles from Strathcona. The population is small. Hundreds of acres are seen here grazing, and the first rail trip is to be seen for thousand miles or more. Not coming into town. It has only 7,000 people, and is growing nicely, and often where a boat man can get good wages and live moderately cheap. Here I hit the source of mixing Hen. Fleming, formerly of Harrowsmith, who is very comfortably situated, having a nice manse and church; also got the "Thrasher" here each year. Edmonton is built on a hill and the people are prosperous, friendly and happy. Growing city of 8,000 people and the a hill of about 200 feet, we find open known as Edmonton. The capital system of Alberta, the seem to be on the far side of the river, as all roads and most of the town is on this side. The best land can be had in all the Canadian West country, but more costly to bring it under cultivation on account of having so much shrub and small timber to clear off. The soil is deep and would remind you very much of the best parts of Old Ontario where our forefathers had cut down the heavy bush and maples, and now the town itself it is booming to the double edge so far that I could not locate for speculation. It will have two new railroads to enter it. The town is on the north bank of the Saskatchewan River, in form of cresent, the guild trading post for the Hudson Bay Company, and still they do business there with the Indians. Edmonton is the gateway of the far north. Returning to Calgary last come south on the C.P.R. to Macleod, and you will find villages springing up rapidly. Just to get off at High River, I called on Foreman and Walker, who are proprietors of a $15,000 hotel, and to my surprise I was convinced that former reports were true, that is, they are piling up the money by the thousand. Again I came home back to Calgary, my last town. I attended two Methodist, Baptist and Salvation Army churches, and found more attention given in the Salvation Army than in any. Calgary is the Ottawa Catarrhozone is the best remedy because it cures in natures way; it kills the germs and builds lotsa health in your system. Carry a Catarrhozone inhaler in your pocket and occasionally and you'll never catch cold—that's worth remembering.

RAILWAY MAN KILLED.

Fred. VanAlstine, of Collins Bay, a fireman on the G. T. Ry., was instantly killed near Ernestown Station on Wednesday forenoon. He was working with the steel gang, laying new rails, and was a little in behind of the rest of the men, counting the rails, when the engine and van backed up, striking him on the knee, which threw his head back against the track. His neck was broken and he died instantly. No cause can be assigned for VanAlstine's accident, unless he thought that he was on the other track. He was twenty-four years of age, and leaves a wife and three children.

DEATH OF A FORMER RESIDENT.

Word was received on Wednesday of the death on October 13th, at Kennewick, Wash., U.S.A., of Mr. Jabez Craig, a former resident of this county, at the ripe old age of 80 years. The remains were interred at North Yakima, Wash., 85 miles northwest of Kennewick. A widow and one brother, Dr. Jas. Craig, of Chattanooga, Tenn., are left to mourn. Deceased was well known here and had many relatives throughout the county. In the early sixties he was engaged in business in Napanee as a druggist with Messrs. John T. and John W. Grange, but afterwards moved to the Village of Tamworth, where he constructed a grist and saw mills for some time. He then went to North Dakota where he amassed considerable money in farming, but sold out about a year ago and moved to his late abode.

RETAIL MERCHANTS CONVENE.

A poorly attended meeting of the retail merchants of Napanee was held in the Council Chambers on Tuesday evening.

Mr. W. T. Gibbard was elected chairman, and called on Mr. A. E. Geen, druggist, of Belleville, to explain to those present the object of the gathering.

Mr. Geen, who is president of the Retail Merchants' Association of Ontario, said it was the desire of that body to form a branch in Napanee. The object of the Association is to protect, in every legitimate way, the retail merchant, to band them together from the Atlantic to the Pacific for mutual protection for the passing of laws and stamping out evils. The question of stamp evil has already been checked; the Association were now trying to get legislation which will overcome the advantage a transient trader has over the home merchant. The Hollers' Act is another way, and anything that comes up to the detriment of the retail merchant will be looked after by this Association. The membership fee is $2.00 per year, $1.00 going to the Provincial headquarters and $1.00 staying in the local fund.

A branch was not started at the meeting, but Mr. Jas. Etude, a representative of the Association, has canvassed the town, and says that a branch will undoubtedly be formed in Napanee shortly.

THE GRANARY OF GREAT BRITAIN

Port Arthur, Ont. Oct. 25th, '05.

Dear Sir,—I thought I would drop you a few lines concerning the great wheat fields of Western Canada, or the granary of Great Britain. I left Winnipeg on June 19th for Toronto, staying there for nearly a week, viewing the city and its surroundings, and was greatly pleased with what I saw of it. The way in which her streets are kept so thoroughly cleaned and looked after is a credit to any city or country in the world. After leaving Toronto I went to Napanee, and worked for a farmer a few miles north of Napanee, still through having more harvest, until the Manitoba Harvest Excursion started. Then I secured a $12.00 ticket from the Grand Trunk Railway ticket office at Toronto, on August 29th, and started for the wheat fields of Western Canada. After reaching Winnipeg we had to have our tickets changed in order to continue our journey westward. So I booked for Port Arthur, Ontario.

It was indeed a pretty sight to see the golden grain all cut and stooked along the road as we were traveling. Farmers were at every station trying to engage men as they were passing through. They were offering $35.00 per day or $40 and $45 per month; so I got off at a place called Kenora, for my chances. I did not know a single person there, but was out on the line about long when a man came over to me and asked me if I was looking for work. I said I was. "You bet I am." "How much do you want per month?" "$40.00 is right. Come with me." So he drove me to his farm, a distance of four and a half miles, and there I worked for him for thirty-five days, mowing, stacking and threshing.

The farmers in this section of the country all seem to be comfortably situated, live in fine houses, and have splendid farms and outbuildings, and all on large farms. Most of them are farmers from dear Old Ontario, who settled there about twenty years ago on homesteads, with little or nothing, and to-day they are well fixed and rapid in a thickly settled farming country.

Wishing you and your staff every success, and also your paper,

I remain yours,

GEORGE ALEXANDER.

Brewster's Millions

By GEORGE BARR M'CUTCHEON (RICHARD GREAVES)

Copyright, 1904, by Herbert S. Stone & Company

CHAPTER I.

"THE Little Sons of the Rich" were gathered about the long table in Pettingill's studio. There were nine of them present besides Brewster. They were all young, more or less enterprising, hopeful and reasonably sure of better things to come. Most of them bore names that meant something in the story of New York. Indeed one of them had remarked, "A man is known by the street that's named after him," and as he was a new member they called him Subway.

The most popular man in the company was young Monty Brewster. He was tall and straight and smooth shaven. People called him "clean looking." Older women were interested in him because his father and mother had made a romantic runaway match, which was the talk of the town in the seventies, and had never been forgiven. Worldly women were interested in him because he was the only grandson of Edwin Peter Brewster, who was many times a millionaire, and Monty was fairly certain to be his heir, barring an absentminded gift to charity. Younger women were interested for a much more obvious and simple reason—he'd kiss him. Men also took to Monty because he was a good sportsman, a man among men, because he had a decent respect for himself and no great aversion to work.

His father and mother had both died while he was still a child, and as it to make up for his long relentlessness the grandfather had taken the boy to his own house and had cared for him with what he called affection. After-college days were spent on the continent, however, Monty had preferred to be independent. Old Mr. Brewster had found him a place in the bank, but he quit and occasional dinners Monty asked for and received no favors. It was a question of work, and hard work and small pay. He lived on his salary and what he had to, but he did not resent his grandfather's attitude. He was better satisfied to spend his "weekly allow'ce" as he called it, in his own way than to earn more by dining seven nights a week with an old man who had forgotten he was ever young. It was less wearing, he said.

Among the Little Sons of the Rich birthdays were always occasions for feasting. The table was covered with dishes sent up from the French restaurant in the basement. The chairs were pushed back, cigarettes were lighted, men had their knees crossed. Then Pettingill got up.

"Gentlemen," he began, "we are here to celebrate the twenty-fifth birthday of Mr. Montgomery Brewster. I ask you all to join me in drinking to his long life and happiness."

"No heel taps!" same one shouted. "Brewster! Brewster!" all called at once.

"For he's a jolly good fellow.
For he's a jolly good fellow!"

The sudden ringing of an electric bell cut off this flow of sentiment, and so unusual was the interruption that the ten members straightened up as if jerked into position by a string.

"The police!" some one suggested. All faces were turned toward the door. A waiter stood there, uncertain whether to turn the knob or push the bolt.

"Number one!" said Richard Van Winkle.

"I want to hear Brewster's speech."

"Speech! Speech!" Echoed everywhere. Men settled into their places.

"Mr. Montgomery Brewster," Pettingill introduced.

Again the bell rang—loud and long.

"Re-enforcements. I'll bet there's a patrol in the street," remarked Oliver Harrison.

"If it's only the police, let them in," said Pettingill, "I thought it was a creditor."

The waiter opened the door.

"Some one to see Mr. Brewster, sir," he announced.

"Is she pretty, waiter?" called McCloud.

"She says he is Ellis, from your grandfather's, sir!"

"My compliments to Ellis and ask him to inform my grandfather that it's after banking hours. I'll see him in the morning," said Mr. Brewster, who had reddened under the jests of his companions.

"Grandpa doesn't want his Monty to stay out after dark," chuckled Subway Smith.

"He's a most thoughtful of the old gentleman to have the man call for you with the perambulator," shouted Harrison amid the laughter. "I wish him you've already had your bottle," added McCloud.

"Walter, tell Ellis I'm too busy to

This you have done willingly and freely. Therefore, we wish to present to you this china hoping that you will enjoy the use of them many years, and thereby that God's blessing shall ever abound to you.

Signed on behalf of Camden V. congregation.

Mr. Coburn replied in behalf of his family, very feelingly expressing our surprise and thanks toward the kind people.

AMEY—WHEELER.

An event of unusual interest occurred in Christ Church, Tamworth, on Thanksgiving Day morning at eleven o'clock, when Miss Lucy Wheeler was married to Capt. Percy Harry Albert Amey of Moscow. The church was tastefully decorated for the occasion, and the ceremony was performed amidst a host of friends by the Rev. Canon Kirkpatrick. The gallant captain is one of the most popular officers of the 47th Regiment, and the knot was tied by the Rev. Canon Kirkpatrick, who is also the Chaplain of the battalion. The bride is a very amiable young lady, who possesses the affection of the entire inhabitants, and many a one wished the happy couple God's blessing, as they drove from the church amidst showers of rice and well-wishing. The bride was gowned in white cloth silk with a Gainsborough hat of white chiffon. A delightful wedding breakfast was served at the bride's home to immediate friends, after which the happy pair left on the noon train for Toronto and other points. The bride's wedding dress was blue silk with hat to match. Without doubt the magnificent array of wedding presents were numerous and costly, as well as useful, good and useful. Special mention ought to be made of a well filled purse presented the bride by a few friends of Christ Church congregation as a token of love for the bride's faithfulness and devotion to the church, as organist for many years past. Also the handsome piece of silver, a salad bowl, presented by Captain by the Colonel and officers of the 47th Regiment.

ANOTHER NAPANEE BOY.

Mr. G. H. Allen, son of the Rev. H. L. Allen, late of Napanee, has won the top seat of the ladies in the insurance business. Owing to his phenomenal success with the Standard Life Assurance Company, it was not at all unnatural that other companies should seek his services. Recently he was engaged by the Mutual Life of Canada to take over the management and direct the affairs of the company in the Province of Quebec.

The Montreal Star last week printed an excellent picture of Mr. Allen, and a long account of his past career, from which we chip the following:

Entering the employ of the company in 1881, in Belleville, Ont., after four years' experience there he was made inspector of the Midland district with headquarters at Peterboro'. In 1890 he was appointed to the position of inspector-in-charge of Eastern Ontario with headquarters at Kingston, where he resided for ten years, four years of which he served upon the city council, taking an active interest in municipal and other politics. In 1900 he was appointed general inspector for the Maritime Provinces and Newfoundland. One year later he was made chief inspector of the company, travelling throughout Canada in the interests of the Standard Life.

Finally to the great regret of the officials of the company he severed his connection with it in July last, after twenty-two years of continuous service of rare merit, ability and energy.

The new offices of the company are large and spacious, but the large staff of about twenty-five almost fills the new rooms fronting on St. James street on the first floor of the Star building.

WEDDING BELLS.

A wedding of much interest occurred last Wednesday, Oct. 25th, when at 8 o'clock, Edith Maud, youngest daughter of A. P. Bell, became the bride of Ernest J. May, of Selby. They were married at her home at Desmond, by the groom's brother-in-law, Rev. J. S. Middleton, of Trenton. The whole house was fragrant with natural flowers, the mantel in the parlor room being banked with choice and beautiful flowers, the dainty-laid tables of the dining room were ablaze with cut flowers, while the parlor was handsomely decorated with flowers, greenery and autumn leaves. The beautiful bride was attired in white, and her hair tastefully arranged with white flowers and satin bows. She carried a handsome bouquet of white roses. The only ornament was a pearl crescent, the gift of the groom. The bridesmaids were a sweet looking maid was being sweetly rendered by Miss Mary Johnston, of Moscow, the bridal party entered the parlor. An aisle of white satin ribbon was formed by four little girls. Misses Anne Breault, Norma Johnston, Alice Bell and Beryl Johnston. These were daintily dressed in white silk and carried baskets of flowers, from which they scattered rose petals for the bride and her small attendant. Miss Hazel McMullen, who carried the ring embedded in a rose. The bride followed her small ring-bearer on the arm of her father, and was met by the groom under an evergreen arch decorated with beautifully tinted autumn leaves. Here the ceremony was performed and congratulations received from her numerous relatives and friends present. After the congratulations a sumptuous supper was partaken of, and the evening spent in music and merriment. The bride and groom took the morning train for Kingston, Toronto, Niagara and thence to their future home in Selby, reception awaits them. They were accompanied as far as Kingston by her sister and husband, Mr. and Mrs. Johnston. The bride is one of Desmond's most popular ladies and will be greatly missed as a leader in social and church matters where she has filled the position as organist for four years. The bride was the recipient of many beautiful and costly presents in silverware, china and glass, showing the high esteem in which she is held.

REV. W. S. BLACKSTOCK.

Toronto S'ar.

A pioneer in Canadian Methodism passed away on Saturday in the person of Rev. Dr. William S. Blackstock. The death occurred at Atlantic City, whither the venerable doctor had gone some three weeks ago in the hope of recovering from an attack of anaemia. The remains will arrive in the city Monday.

Dr. Blackstock was born in Buffalo in 1826, and was accepted as a probationer in the Methodist ministry at the age of 20. Four years later he was ordained, and labored for many years in both Upper and Lower Canada. A powerful preacher and indefatigable worker, and large-hearted, he endeared himself to his congregations wherever he went. Later he came to Toronto, and took an active part in all departments of church work. He was also famed much to the Christian Guardian, and was one of the stalwarts in the movement for the union of the Methodist Episcopal, the New Methodist, Primitive Methodist, New Connexion, and Bible Christian Churches.

Dr. Blackstock's widow, who survives him, is a daughter of the late Thomas Gibbs of Oshawa, and a sister of the late Senator Gibbs and Mr. W. H. Gibbs, for many years M.P. for North Ontario. The children are Mrs. Messrs. Thomas G. Blackstock and Dewart. The Blackstock, K.C., of the firm of Beatty, Blackstock, Haskin and Wilkinson; Miss Blackstock, Mrs. McKeggie, widow of the late J. H. McKeggie, of Barrie; and Mrs. Dyer, wife of Major Dyer of Kangoon, Dar-mah.

ARE YOU LOSING FLESH?

Then something is wrong. To the young it always means trouble. It's a warning to any one, unless they are already too fat. Scott's Emulsion checks this waste and brings up your weight again. 43b

Consumption

¶ There is no specific for consumption. Fresh air, exercise, nourishing food and Scott's Emulsion will come pretty near curing it, if there is anything to build on. Millions of people throughout the world are living and in good health on one lung.

¶ From time immemorial the doctors prescribed cod liver oil for consumption. Of course the patient could not take it in its old form, hence it did very little good. They can take and tolerate it for a long time. There is no oil, not excepting butter, so easily digested and absorbed by the system as cod liver oil in the form of Scott's Emulsion, and that is the reason it is so helpful in consumption where its use must be continuous.

¶ We will send you a sample free.

¶ Be sure that this picture in the form of a label is on the wrapper of every bottle of Scott's Emulsion you buy.

Clothes and Medicines Have Changed.

Times and clothes have changed during twenty-five years. So have medicines.

You do not wear the style of clothes people did then. Such clothes are old fashioned now. And yet some people, as a matter of habit, still buy medicines put on the market twenty-five years ago, which in their way are just as old-fashioned as the clothes of our ancestors.

Good in their day, there is something better now, for medicines, the clothes, have changed, and changed for the better.

Medicines, like clothes, are made from different materials now than they were twenty-five years ago. Some of the materials used in making Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women had not been discovered then. You cannot get these new ingredients in old time remedies. And yet these ingredients are used now in diseases of women by all the world's greatest physicians.

Then again, medicines, like clothes, are made now in a different way. Twenty-five years ago it was thought necessary to make medicines in liquid form. To-day all the best remedies are put up in tablet forms.

Alcohol and opium, those relics of the past, are now universally discarded, although they are still used in liquid preparations, to allow an immediate effect and an apparent improvement in health, which does not really exist.

Such preparations, however, are deadly in their ultimate effect, and are so described by honest and capable physicians.

Progressive women — thinking women keep up to date in the matter of medicines as well as clothes. They are buying Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets, the twentieth century preparation for women, and the one now recognized beyond doubt or question as the one best adapted to their special needs.

These tablets are made from the formula of Dr. Hugo, of Paris, the distinguished specialist in diseases of women. No Paris modiste is better qualified to design up-to-date gowns, than is Dr. Hugo to prescribe an up-to-date medicine for women. His forty years' experience is worth something.

When women buy a gown they require it to be up-to-date, just as a matter of appearance. Why should they be satisfied with anything but the latest and best in medicine, when it is a matter of health? In Dr. Hugo's remedy they have both the latest and the best. There is no other just as good.

There is no other that, without injury to the system, will relieve so quickly that tired feeling, nervousness, and irritability that comes during the seven critical periods of women. Nor is there another that will cure all menstruation and uterine troubles, even when chronic.

Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women will do all this. They are doing it for women every day. There is only one class of women they will not cure—those who think the tablets are like the old time remedies and therefore will not take them.

But they are just as different as is the dress of twenty-five years ago, and it takes but one box to prove it.

be seen," commanded Brewster, and as Ellis went down in the elevator a roar followed him.

"Now for Brewster's speech! Brewster!"

Monty rose.

"Gentlemen, you seem to have forgotten for the moment that I am twenty-five years old this day and that your remarks have been childish and wholly unbecoming the dignity of my age. That I have arrived at a period of discretion is evident from my choice of friends; that I am entitled to your respect is evident from my grandfather's notorious wealth. You have done me the honor to drink my health and to reassure me as to the inoffensiveness of approaching senility. Now I ask you all to rise and drink to the Little Sons of the Rich. May the Lord love us!"

An hour later Rip Van Winkle and Subway Smith were singing "Tell Me, Pretty Maiden," to the uncertain accompaniment of Pettingill's violin, when the electric bell again disturbed the company.

"For heaven's sake!" shouted Harrison, who had been singing "With All Thy Faults, I Love Thee Still," to Pettingill's lily figure.

"Come home with me, grandson; come home with me now," suggested Subway Smith.

"Tell Ellis to go to Halifax!" commanded Montgomery. And again Ellis took the elevator downward. His usually impassive face now wore a look of anxiety, and twice he started to return to the top floor, shaking his head dubiously. At last he climbed into a hansom and reluctantly left the revelers behind. He knew it was a birthday celebration, and it was only half past 12 in the morning.

At 3 o'clock the elevator made another trip to the top floor, and Ellis rushed over to the unfriendly doorbell. This time there was stubborn determination in his face. The clanging ceased, and a roar of laughter followed the hush of a moment or two.

"Come in!" called a hearty voice. And Ellis strode firmly into the studio.

"You are just in time for a 'night-cap,' Ellis," cried Harrison, rushing to the footman's side. Ellis, stolidly facing the young man, lifted his hand.

"No, thank you, sir," he said respectfully. "Mr. Montgomery, if you'll excuse me for breaking in, I'd like to give you three messages I've brought here tonight."

"You're a faithful old chap," said Subway Smith thickly. "Hanged if I'd do A. D. T. work till 3 a. m. for anybody."

"I came at 10, Mr. Montgomery, with a message from Mr. Brewster wishing you many happy returns of the day and with a check from him for $1,000. Here's the check, sir. I'll give my messages in the order I received them, if you please. At 12:20 o'clock I came with a message from Dr. Gower, sir, who had been called in"—

"Called in?" gasped Montgomery, turning white.

"Yes, sir. Mr. Brewster had a sudden heart attack at half past 11, sir. The doctor sent word by me, sir, that he was at the point of death. My last message"—

"Good Lord!"

"This time I bring a message from Hawles, the butler, asking you to come to Mr. Brewster's house at once, if you can, sir—I mean if you will, sir." Ellis interjected apologetically. Then, with his gaze directed steadily over the heads of the subdued "sons," he added impressively:

"Mr. Brewster is dead, sir."

CHAPTER II.

MONTGOMERY BREWSTER no longer had "prospects." People could not now point him out with the remark that some day he would come into a million or two. He had "realized," as Oliver Harrison would have put it. Two days after his grandfather's funeral a final will and testament was read, and, as was expected, the old banker stoned for the hardships Robert Brewster and his wife had endured by bequeathing $1,000,000 to their son Montgomery. It was his without a restriction, without an admonition, without an incumbrance. There was not a suggestion as to how it should be handled by the heir. The business training the old man had given him was synonymous with conditions not expressed in the will. The dead man believed that he had drilled into the youth an unmistakable conception of what was expected of him in life. If he failed in these expectations the misfortune would be his alone to bear. A road had been carved out for him, and behind him stretched a long line of guideposts whose laconic instructions might be ignored, but never forgotten. Edwin Peter Brewster evidently made his will with the sensible conviction that it was necessary for him to die before anybody else could possess his money and that once dead it would be folly for him to live over the way in which beneficiaries might choose to manage their own affairs.

The house in Fifth avenue went to a sister, together with a million or two, and the residue of the estate found kindly disposed relatives who were willing to keep it from going to the Home For Friendless Fortunes. Oh! Mr. Brewster left his affairs in order. The will nominated Jerome Huskirk as executor, and he was instructed, in conclusion, to turn over to Montgomery Brewster the day after the will was probated securities to the amount of $1,000,000, provided for in clause 4 of the instrument. And so it was that on the 20th of September young Mr. Brewster had an unconditional fortune thrust upon him, weighted only with the suggestion of cripe that clung to it.

Since his grandfather's death he had been staying with friends on Hudson and Brewster house in Fifth avenue, paying but two or three hurried visits to the rooms at Mrs. Gray's where he had made his home. The gloom of death still darkened the Fifth avenue place, and there was a stillness, a gentle stealthiness, about the house that made him long for more cheerful companionship. He wondered dimly if a fortune always carried the suggestion of tuberoses. The richness and strangeness of it all hung about him unpleasantly. He had had no extravagant affection for the grim old dictator who was dead, yet his grandfather's iron will and pride commanded his respect. It seemed brutal to leave him out of the reckoning—to dance on the grave of the mentor who had treated him so well. The attitude of the friends who clapped him on the back, of the newspapers which congratulated him, of the crowd that expected him to rejoice, repelled him. It seemed a tragic comedy, haunted, too, by memories and by sharp regret for his own ungenerous thoughtlessness. Even the fortune itself weighed upon him at moments with a half defined melancholy.

Now the situation was not without its compensations. For several days when Ellis called him at 7 he would answer him and thank fortune that he was not required at his bank that morning. The luxury of another hour of sleep seemed the greatest perquisite of wealth. His morning mail amused him at first, for since the newspapers had published his prosperity to the world he was deluged with letters. Requests for public or private charity were abundant, but most of his correspondents were generous and thought only of his own good.

For three days he was in a hopeless state of bewilderment. He was visited by reporters, photographers and ingenious strangers, who benevolently offered to invest his money in enterprises with certified futures. When he was not engaged in declining a gold mine in Colorado, worth $5,000,000, marked down to $450, he was avoiding a guileless investor who offered to sacrifice the secrets of a marvelous device for $200 or denying the report that he had been tendered the presidency of the First National bank.

Oliver Harrison stirred him out early one morning and, while the sleepy millionaire was rubbing his eyes and still dodging the bombshell that a dream anarchist had hurled into the peaceful calm of a bedpost, urged him in excited, confidential tones to take time by the forelock and prepare for a possible breach of promise suits. Brewster sat on the edge of the bed and listened to diabolical stories of how conscienceless females had fleeced innocent and even godly men of wealth. From the bathroom between splashes he retailed Harrison by the year, month, day and hour to stand between him and blackmail.

The directors of the bank met and adopted resolutions in memoriam. The death of their late president, passed the leadership on to the first vice president and speedily adjourned. The question of admitting Ellis to the directory was brought up and discussed, but it was left for time to settle.

One of the directors was Colonel Prentiss Drew, the railroad magnate" of the newspapers. He had shown a fondness for young Mr. Brewster, and Monty had been a frequent visitor at his house. Colonel Drew called him "my dear boy," and Monty called him "a bully old chap," though not in his presence. But the existence of Miss Barbara Drew may have had something to do with the feeling between the two men.

As he left the directors' room on the afternoon of the meeting Colonel Drew came up to Monty, who had notified the officers of the bank that he was leaving.

"Ah, my dear boy," said the colonel, shaking the young man's hand warmly, "now you have a chance to show what you can do. You have a fortune, and, with judgment, you ought to be able to triple it. If I can help you in any way, come and see me."

Monty thanked him.

"You'll be bored to death by the raft of people who have ways to spend your money," continued the colonel. "Don't listen to any of them. Take your time. You'll have a new chance to make money every day of your life, so go slowly. I'd have been rich years and years ago if I'd had sense enough to run away from promoters. They'll all try to get a whack at your money. Keep your eye open, Monty. The rich young man is always a tempting morsel." After a moment's reflection he added, "Won't you come out and dine with us tomorrow night?"

CHAPTER III.

MRS. GRAY lived in Fortieth street. For years Montgomery Brewster had regarded her quiet, old fashioned home as his own. The house had once been her grandfather's, and it was one of the pioneers in that part of the town. It was there she was born, in its quaint old parlor she was married, and all her girlhood, her brief wedded life and her widowhood were connected with it. Mrs. Gray and Montgomery's mother had been schoolmates and playmates, and their friendship endured. When old Edwin Peter Brewster looked about for a place to house his orphaned grandson, Mrs. Gray begged him to let her care for the little fellow. He was three years older than her Margaret, and the children grew up as brother and sister. Mr. Brewster was generous in providing for the boy. While he was away at college, spending money in a manner that caused the old gentleman to marvel at his own liberality, Mrs. Gray was well paid for the unused but well kept apartments, and there never was a murmur of complaint from Edwin Peter Brewster. He was hard, but he was not niggardly.

It had been something of a struggle for Mrs. Gray to make both ends meet. The property in Fortieth street was her only possession. But little money had come to her at her husband's death, and an unfortunate speculation of his had swept away all that had fallen to her from her father, the late Judge Merriweather. For years she kept the old home unincumbered, teaching French and English until Margaret was well into her teens. The girl was sent to one of the good old boarding schools on Hudson and came out well prepared to help her mother in the battle to keep the wolf down and appearances up. Margaret was rich in friendships, and pride alone stood between her and the advantages they offered. Good looking, bright and cheerful, she took contributions and privations. With a heart as light and joyous as a May morning she faced adversity as though it were a pleasure, and no one would have suspected that even for a moment her courage wavered.

Now that Brewster had come into his splendid fortune he could exercise no greater delight than to share it with them. To walk into the little drawing room and serenely lay large sums before them as their own seemed such a natural proceeding that he refused to see an obstacle. But he knew it was there. The proffer of such a gift to Mrs. Gray would mean a wound to the pride inherited from haughty generations of men sufficient proof of bank notes were tucked snugly away in a pocket that seemed to swell with sudden affluence. Old Hendrick, faithful servitor through two generations, was sweeping the autumn leaves from the sidewalk when Montgomery came up to the house.

"Hello, Hendrick!" was the young man's cheery greeting. "Nice lot of leaves you have there."

"So?" ebbed from Hendrick, who did not even so much as look up from his work. Hendrick was a human clam.

"Mrs. Gray in?"

A grunt that signified yes.

"You're as loquacious as ever, Hendrick."

A mere nod.

Brewster let himself in with his own latchkey, threw his hat on a chair and unceremoniously bolted into the library. Margaret was seated near a window, a book in her lap. The first evidence of unbiased friendship he had seen in days shone in her smile. She took his hand and said simply, "We are glad to welcome the prodigal to his home again."

"I remind myself more of the fatted calf."

Her first self consciousness had gone. "I thought of that, but I didn't dare say it," she laughed. "One must be respectful to rich relatives."

"Hang your rich relatives, Peggy! If I thought that this money would make any difference I would give it up this minute."

"Nonsense, Monty!" she said. "How could it make a difference? But you must admit it is rather startling. The friend of our youth leaves his humble dwelling Saturday night with his salary drawn for two weeks ahead. He returns the following Thursday a dazzling millionaire."

"I'm glad I've begun to dazzle anyway. I thought it might be hard to look the part."

"Well, I can't see that you are much changed." There was a suggestion of a quaver in her voice, and the shadows did not prevent him from seeing the quick mist that flitted across her deep eyes.

"After all, it's easy work being a millionaire," he explained, "when you've always had million dollar inclinations."

"And fifty cent possibilities," she added.

"Really, though, I'll never get as much joy out of my abundant riches as I did out of financial embarrassments."

"But think how fine it is, Monty, not ever to wonder where your winter's overcoat is to come from and how long the coal will last and all that."

"Oh, I never wondered about my overcoats. The tailor did the wondering. But I wish I could go on living here just as before. I'd a heap rather live here than at that gloomy place on the avenue."

"That sounded like the things you used to say when we played in the garret. You'd a heap sooner do this than that, don't you remember?"

"That's just why I'd rather live here, Peggy. Last night I felt to thinking of that old garret, and hanged if something didn't come up and stick in my throat so tight that I wanted to cry. How long has it been since we played up there? Yes, and how long has it been since I read Oliver Optic to you, Mr. Perkins go out for something to eat? The millionaire habit isn't so firmly fixed as I supposed." After a moment's pause, in which his growing seriousness changed the atmosphere, he went on haltingly, uncertain of his position, "The nicest thing about having all this money is that—that—we won't have to deny ourselves anything after this." It did not sound very tactful, and yet he knew that Margaret was compelled to scrutinize rather intently a familiar portrait in order to maintain an air of careless assurance. She did not respond to this venture, but he felt that she was looking directly into his sorely tried brain. "We'll do any amount of decorating about the house, and—and you know that furnace has been giving us a lot of trouble for two or three years"— He was pouring out ruthlessly what her hand fell gently on his own, and she stood straight and tall before him, an odd look in her eyes.

"Don't—please don't go on, Monty," she said very gently, but without wavering. "I know what you mean. You are good and very thoughtful, Monty, but you really must not."

"Why, what's mine is yours"— he began.

"I know you are generous, Monty, and I know you have a heart. You want us to—to take some of your money." It was not easy to say it, and as for Monty, he could only look at the floor. "We cannot, Monty, dear. You must never speak of it again. Mamma and I had a feeling that you would do it; but, don't you see, even from you it is an offer of help, and it hurts."

"Don't talk like that, Peggy," he implored.

"It would break her heart if you offered to give her money in that way. She'd hate it, Monty. It is foolish, perhaps, but you know we can't take your money."

"I thought you—that you—oh, this knocks all the joy out of it!" he burst out desperately.

"Dear Monty!"

"Let's talk it over, Peggy. You don't understand," he began, dashing at what he thought would be a break in her reserve.

"Don't!" she commanded. And in her blue eyes was the hot flash he had felt once or twice before.

He rose and walked across the floor, back and forth again and then stood before her, a smile on his lips—a rather pitiful smile, but still a smile. There were tears in her eyes as she looked at him.

"It's a confounded puritanical prejudice, Peggy," he said in futile protest, "and you know it."

"You have not seen the letters that came for you this morning. They're on the table over there," she replied, ignoring him.

He found the letters and resumed his seat in the window, glancing half heartedly over the contents of the envelopes. The last was from Grant & Ripley, attorneys, and even from his abstraction it brought a surprised "By Jove!" He read it aloud to Margaret.

Sept. 30.

Montgomery Brewster, Esq., New York:

Dear Sir—We are in receipt of a communication from Mr. Swearengen Jones of Montana conveying the sad intelligence that your uncle, James T. Sedgwick, died on the 24th inst. at M— hospital in Portland after a brief illness. Mr. Jones by this time has qualified in Montana as the executor of your uncle's will and has retained us as his eastern representatives. He inclosed a copy of the will, in which you are named as sole heir, with conditions attending. Will you call at our office this afternoon if it is convenient? It is important that you know the contents of the instrument at once. Respectfully yours,

GRANT & RIPLEY.

For a moment there was only amazement in the air. Then a faint, bewildered smile appeared in Monty's face and reflected itself in the girl's.

"Who is your Uncle James?" she asked.

"I've never heard of him."

"You must go to Grant & Ripley's at once, of course."

"Have you forgotten, Peggy," he replied, with a hint of vexation in his voice, "that we are to read Oliver Optic this afternoon?"

CHAPTER IV.

"YOU are both fortunate and unfortunate, Mr. Brewster," said Mr. Grant, after the young man had dropped into a chair in the office of Grant & Ripley the next day. Montgomery wore a slightly bored expression, and it was evident that he took little interest in the will of James T. Sedgwick. From Montana about fifteen years ago and there formed a stanch friendship with old Swearengen Jones, one of the richest men in the state. Sedgwick's will was signed on the day of his death, Sept. 24, and it was quite natural that Mr. Jones should be named as his executor. That is how we became interested in the matter, Mr. Brewster."

"I see," said Montgomery, somewhat puzzled. "But why do you say that I am both fortunate and unfortunate?"

"The situation is so remarkable that you'll consider that a mild way of putting it when you've heard everything. I think you were told in our note of yesterday that you are the sole heir. Well, it may surprise you to learn that James Sedgwick died insolvent. He left behind him debts to the amount of $7,000,000."

Montgomery Brewster sat like one petrified, staring blankly at the old lawyer, who could say startling things in a level voice.

"He owned gold mines and ranches in the northwest, and there is no question as to their value. Mr. Jones in a letter to us briefly outlines the history of James Sedgwick from the time he landed in Montana. He reached there in 1852 from Australia, and he was worth $80,000 or $40,000 at the time. Within five years he was the owner of a huge ranch, and scarcely had another five years passed before he was part owner of three rich gold mines. Postlacious accumulates rapidly; everything he touched turned to gold. He was shrewd, careful and thrifty, and his money was handled with all the skill of a Wall street financier. At the time of his death in Portland he did not owe a dollar in the world. His property is absolutely unincumbered—safe and sound as a government bond. It's rather overwhelming, isn't it?" the lawyer concluded, taking note of Brewster's expression.

"And he—he left everything to me?"

"With a proviso."

"Ah!"

"I have a copy of the will. Mr. Ripley and I are the only persons in New York who at present know its contents. You, I am sure, after hearing it, will not divulge them without the most careful deliberation."

Mr. Grant drew the document from a pigeonhole in his desk, adjusted his glasses and prepared to read. Except as though struck by a sudden thought, he laid the paper down and turned once more to Brewster.

SMITH'S GROCERY.

GIBRALTAR IS CRUMBLING.

Chicago Chronicle.

The public is not aware that the great rock of Gibraltar is tumbling down—that its crumbling, rolling masses must be continually bound together with huge patches of masonry and cement.

Yet they who sail past Gibraltar cannot fail to notice on the eastern slope of the fortress enormously large colored patches gleaming in the sun. These patches in some cases 30 or 40 feet square, are the proof of Gibraltar's disintegration. Of this crumbling cement, they keep huge spurs of the cliffs aside from tumbling into the blue sea.

Sea captains, cruising in the Mediterranean, say that Gibraltar has been rotting and crumbling for many years, but that of late the disintegration has gone on at a faster rate than heretofore.

They say that the stone forming this imposing cliff is rotten stone, and that in a line while the phrase, "the strength of Gibraltar" will be meaningless.

MEDICAL PROPERTIES OF SALT.

Salt has healing and health-giving properties, both taken internally and as an outward application. The efficiency and strengthening qualities of sea baths are well known. Fisher folk will tell you that to drink a little sea water every day for a week or longer is an unfailing cure for indigestion. People who are too delicate to stand the invigorating cold plunge of sea bathing are often recommended by their physicians to take warm sea baths. Old sores, having long defied treatment, have been cured by constant bathing in sea water, which is very good for the skin and complexion, especially if it be a rich one, a natural oily acid rather than an alkaline tendency. Salt dissolved in milk and applied to the face with a soft rag, after washing in soft hot water, nightly for a week or so, imparts a velvety softness to the complexion. Salt water is also good for the scalp, as it is the most efficacious, though simplest, remedy known for falling hair. A solution of salt and water is also good for bathing sore eyes.

If one has taken too much salt, either medicinally or in food highly seasoned enough to make one unpleasantly thirsty, a little acid, either in the form of lemonade or vinegar and water, will speedily remove the inconvenience.

A bag of hot salt applied to the face or affected part is a great relief in neuralgia. Applied to a cut finger, salt, though it makes it smart very much at the time, will heal the gash quicker than anything else.

The trial of Samuel Harryett at Belleville for conspiracy in connection with the bogus ballot-box case, resulted in an acquittal.

A pavillion, encased in evergreen boughs and hung with lanterns, was built on the lawn and was connected to the house by an arch reach ng from the drawing room door. At supper time a dainty lunch was given and all unmasked to the fun and merriment of all. The dancing and games continued until early morning. When the happy gathering was broken up, all having enjoyed it to the fullest extent.

LIME LAKE.

We regret to relate a very sad accident which occurred five miles west of Harrowsmith. While some men were working in the woods, felling rock elm for Mr. Dudy, Albert Sharp sustained a very serious fracture in the right leg, about two or three inches above the ankle. Dr. Burrows was summoned, and every possible attention was paid to the poor fellow, who bore his pain with great patience. However, after careful consideration it was thought best to remove him to Kingston Hospital. Before his removal it was proposed by Mr. Norman Lapsley, and seconded by Mr. Charles Dudy, that a subscription should be got up, and the sum of $35.00 was collected.

HIGH SPEED FOR MAILS.

Harper's Weekly.

A French system for a high-speed railway for the transmission of parcels and mail matter is now being developed, where a speed of 156 miles an hour has been attained. It is designed to serve for interurban or long distance transmission the same purpose as the pneumatic tubes in cities. It consists of a line of ringerail, on which the main wheels of the car or carriage run, while there is a guide rail against which special guide-wheels bear. The propelling power is supplied by three-phase motors, which use current at 1,000 volts and 40 cycles per second. The motors are connected by belt with the driving wheels, and an elaborate system for lubrication and automatic oil pumps is provided.

The car used in the tests was 28.8 feet in length and 8 1-2 feet in width, and weighed 6 3-4 tons, there being accommodation for a half-ton of parcels or mail matter, which could be carried in a space of seventy cubic feet.

The experimental track used for test has the new system was circular, with a radius of 3,640 feet, and on this a speed of 156 miles an hour was attained readily—in fact, this speed being exceeded within two minutes from starting. The operation of the car was to be controlled by the current and by means of wings, which can be operated automatically through the cutting of a series by a fixed knife placed in the path of the car.

The use of such a system when practically developed would result in cutting down the time required for sending mail matter between adjacent cities from one-half to two-thirds, and no particular elaborate features of construction are involved.

In every community there is need of a store to which people can go with entire confidence; confidence in the goods sold, in the prices charged, in the fairness and accuracy of the service.

In this community we shall ever aim to conduct such a store.

We try to give better goods for less money, better quality for less profit, more satisfaction for less cost than can be had elsewhere. Put us to the test.

Deseronto Tribune—From a cut published in Simpson Crieis he almost certain that he could identify the victim of the murder committed back of Hamilton, on October 9th, as Nettie Simmonds, wife of William Green, of Selby. Deseronto about a month ago to go to Collingwood, but that before the last heard from her. The fact that she had on American made boots may be accounted for by the fact that the woman had been living in Rochester, N.Y., for some time during the summer.

PRACTICAL POINTERS.

That up-to-date firms are alive to the benefits of advertising to keep their goods before the public, was illustrated in a practical manner this week when the "Salada" Tea Co. presented each family in Napanee with a dainty little 2 oz. packet of their famous "Salada" tea. The object of this wholesale distribution of tea was to afford everybody not already a "Salada" drinker, an opportunity to compare it with the tea they were accustomed to use, while either black or green samples were given as requested. The attention of Japan or other green tea drinkers was particularly directed to "Salada" (natural leaf) Ceylon Green.

We hear much about the passing of Japan tea and notwithstanding that the consumption of tea is on the increase, it is an acknowledged fact that the importation of this once popular tea has fallen off enormously. About six years ago "Salada" (natural leaf) Ceylon Green tea was introduced and from that day to the present the change has been gradually taking place. To the initiated there is little cause for surprise, and a teapot test will speedily enlighten the others. "Salada" Ceylon Green tea, in comparison with Japan or other artificially colored green tea, will develop several important points of difference.

The appearance of the dry leaf should in itself convince the most sceptical, being natural without a trace of coloring matter. It is much stronger, consequently more economical.

It possesses a flavor distinctly its own, infinitely superior to other teas. Being absolutely pure it is wholesome and invigorating. Then all its original virtues are preserved by being packed in sealed lead packets, and further it has never been exposed to the contaminating influence of foreign odors, to which all bulk teas are more or less subject. Salada Black or Green is positively never sold in bulk. It may be had in all groceries in pound and half-pound packets. See that the word "Salada" is on the label.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

Mr. Editor,—Is it not about time the citizens of Napanee expressed their opinions as to the course pursued by Sir R. J. Cartwright in obstructing the erection of the electric light plant? In the hope of delaying the completion of the work and thereby maintaining the delightful monopoly of furnishing the citizens with light from his gas company, he is leaving no stone unturned to accomplish his end. It would be well for the citizens to bear this in mind. If a public meeting were called it might not do any good, but if the sentiment of such a meeting were asked it would be a unanimous condemnation of Sir Richard's tactics. The people want an electric light plant of their own and they are going to have it, in spite of Sir Richard Cartwright and his minions. He can no longer play the role of dictator to the Town of Napanee. The Council are to be commended for the businesslike manner in which they tackled the light question and for the persistence with which they have followed it up. The citizens are at their back and will see them through with their undertaking. No one believed that anyone having a particle of respect for the Town of Napanee could be found who would seek to delay this good work by trying to take advantage of a technicality which can in no way affect the merits of the case. Such a man however has been found in Sir Richard. He may some day awake to the fact that he has made a great big mistake. Yours truly,

ALL WHO TRUST IN GOD

SUBJECTS OF SOLICITOUS DIVINE CARE AND PROTECTION.

OUR LIVES A DEVELOPMENT

Like a True Parent God Plans For His Earthly Children What Is Best For Them, But Gives Them Free Will to Grow Strong Amid the Troubles and Temptations of Our Life Here Below.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1905, by Frederick Dyer, of Toronto, at the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Oct. 29.—That our lives here are a process of development and that the divine care and protection around a child trust in God is the theme of the preacher in this sermon. The text is Psalm xci., 17, "The Lord thinketh upon me."

Spiritualistic mediums perpetrate many frauds. But the greatest of their absurdities is not found in the moanings and groanings by which they apparently summoned the dead to their darkly panelled rooms and compel them to speak to their insane victims. It is founded in the ridiculous photography by which the dupes of spiritualistic mediums have their pictures taken, surrounded, as they are told to believe, by the spirit faces of their loved ones who are near to yet not of this earth. Have you ever seen any of these fictitious pictures? Within a few blocks of my old eastern home was a little stationery store which had its show windows filled with them. Raphael painted his "Sistine Madonna" surrounded by cherubs of angel faces. Those deceitful photographs that I saw in that window showed believers in spiritualism surrounded by the faces of their departed kindred and dear ones and friends. There they were in those pictures, the living with the dead, side by side. Could any fraud be more bold, more cruel and more corrupt than that which declares that such pictures are genuine? And yet as I would stop and study these pictures on my way home during the winter afternoons I often said to myself, "Absurd those pictures are, but how can they be true they are figuratively!" A man is never a true man unless he always has many faces ahead of him. The thing that he is alone, but he is not alone. These faces, these environments, have been over him in benediction. They smile at him when he smiles. They go with him to please and console and rebuke him while he is there. They joke with him. They plead with him. They pray with him. They come and go by his bed when he is about to fall asleep. They greet him the moment when he awakens in the morning. Some of these faces are old. Some are young. Some are just budding into young womanhood. Some are middle-aged. But these faces are always about us. They are about you. They are about me.

They are about us when we are at home; they are about us when we are away from home. We may be traveling in a railroad train a thousand miles away from our own residence. It is the evening hour. We are tired of reading the book. We throw it down and rest our head on the window ledge and look out of the window and begin to see many faces. "Yes," we say to ourselves "this is the evening hour. Our wives are putting the babies to bed." People may say we are alone in a railroad train, but we are not. We are home. I tell you we are home. We feel the baby boy climb up into our lap and beg us to tell him a story; we see our little girls sitting by the table studying their lessons. After the prayers have been said and the bedroom lights turned out and the last journey to the crib has been taken, with its drinking water and the good-night kiss, we see our wives go and get the darning bag filled with a lot of the children's stockings. She sits down by our side. Then she looks up with a sweet smile and says, "My dear, let us have a good talk." As we talk she sews the big holes the boys have made in their stockings by the old down in the cellar door, which is their favorite toboggan. There she sits in the railroad train conversing. While we are thinking of our absent dear ones, by the telepathy of love we know they are thinking of us. They are comforted by our side. It is because they are ever present with us in thought that we try to be just as good and pure and true as if we could kiss their lips and talk to them in the flesh as well as in the spirit.

But are the faces of a father, a mother, a wife, a child, the only ones that are ever present with us, because they are always thinking of us as we are of them? Oh, no. David, the sweet singer of Israel says there is another face which we must place ever and above the human faces hovering about us. That is the face of God. He is thinking about us. He is planning for us. He is pleading with us. I want to impress on your minds the fact that the Lord's love is ever present with us and that he is continually thinking about us.

God plans for us as a developing friend. He is like a true parent who has a child given into his care by the birth right. The mother and father look into the face of a child and say: "Now, I have a child. I will shield him. I will always keep him by my side as a helpless child." Oh, no. That is not the true father's way. So soon as he is little child leaves the arms no more than at once the parent begins to plan ahead for that child. He plans for him as a baby, as a boy, as a youth and as a fully developed man. He plants this planning ahead when he chooses the name for the christening. The selection of the baby's name is no easy task. The mother was not of a poetic temperament. She may desire to give her son a name euphonious as one of the romantic names of the wild woods. But the father says: "No, my son in all probability is not going to be a poet or a musician. He is going to be a plain, practical business man or a lawyer or a doctor or a minister. He must have a good, sound, common-sense name that will not make him a laughing stock among his associates and one that can easily be remembered. Call him Joseph or James or William or Edward or John." The planning of the parents for the child starts at the christening.

Then comes the question of school. Perhaps the father has amassed some wealth. The money question is not a pressing one in the home, because shall the boy get his education? The mother may desire to have her son go to one of the aristocratic private schools of the city, where he will have for companions the sons of wealthy families. Again the hard-headed common-sense of the father comes to the rescue. "No," he says, "No private school for my boy. My father sent me to a private school. There I dabbled a little in a dozen different studies and did not master any one of them. My boy shall go to a common public school, where the foundations and the rudiments of an education are pounded into him. I want him to master the three Re's—reading, writing, arithmetic. I want him at fifteen years of age to know how to write a letter. That is what thousands of college-bred men do not know. I want him to learn to spell and punctuate correctly and for the rudiments of an education have been soaked into him, then we can talk about private schools or a university course."

After the school days are over what happens? The common-sense father makes the boy start out for himself. If the lad enters business, he makes him work in the store or office when the father is not. If possible, he sends the son away for a little while, to work in another city among strangers, so that the boy learns to think for himself and stand upon his own feet. Then the wise father does all this not because he is hard hearted; not because he wants to get rid of the boy, but for the benefit of life upon the boy because he is a true friend to the child, planning his best development, so that when he make the most out of his son and bring him to the highest physical, mental, moral and spiritual development. He is planning for us in a wide sense what the earthly parent is doing for his child in a limited sense. He is planning the burdens upon us to develop us. He is not making us struggle for the mere pleasure of seeing us suffer. He is compelling us to be caretakers that we may grow in strength and that from the higher mountain peaks of inspiration and power which he has lifted for our fortunes, and put to-day there, we may very few who have grace enough to thank God for the divine hand which has smitten them on a bed of pain for the divine lip which is ready to speak the words of comfort and good cheer.

Troubles are beneficent when packed upon a man's back in certain quantities. They may and do develop the physical and mental and spiritual man. But though the soldier goes forth with a brave heart to fight the battles of his country, with a brave smock upon his shoulder, he could not fight, no matter how brave his heart was, if a rock or victi's chain riveted to his ankle and a mountain of oppression tumbled over upon his breast. Thus, then it is the duty of a true parent to put certain burdens and cares upon his child to develop him, it is also the father's duty to see that his child shall not have too great burdens to bear, which will break his back and crush his will. As does a true father, so God plans for us. "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth. God deadeth with pain all his sons. For what son is he whom the father chasteneth not?" This means that the father reproves, rebukes and exhorts and develops the child by the heavy hand of trouble so that the Father deals with his own. But in Corinthians I also read these words as a qualifying clause: "God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able, but will with the temptation also make a way to escape that ye may be able to bear it." That means that when troubles or temptations come upon us we greater than we can bear then the Lord, who is always planning for us, will step in and stand between us and that temptation. Thus I find God the developing friend. In the next place I find God the protector. God the shielder, God the warder off of two great dangers when we are not able to care for ourselves.

Let me illustrate how well nigh impossible it is for some men to help themselves unless they are first helped by others. Last summer it was my privilege, with a couple of gentlemen, to go camping through the mountains of southern California. For a long time I had wished to penetrate these mountains and go and live for a while upon some of the Indian reservations. The great "San Luis Rey festival" was to take place among a couple of these tribes. We timed our trip to witness this festival, so important in Indian life. There I saw some of the old Indians, almost as ignorant and superstitious as their ancestors were centuries ago. An old Indian woman told me some of the strangest facts about them. She said to me: "Do you know that many of these Indians believe in ghosts and apparitions, just as did their grandparents? Though they talk but little during the day, yet they hesitate to go out at night because they are afraid of the darkness. They always whistle or sing to keep the spirits from tearing them to pieces. Then there is another peculiarity about them. With all the advancement of civilization everywhere seen, many of these Indians have not learned to live upon the commonest laws of health. They build their adobe houses with no adequate means of ventilation. When they become sick some of them will go to bed. Then they will have erected four posts at the four corners of the bed, in the old Louis XIV style. I have seen the friends cover these posts over with blankets and not leave one loophole for the fresh air to get in. There the sick man will lie and simply be smothered to death. On account of bad ventilation we find that most of these Indians die of consumption, although these mountains furnish the air which cures the white men of consumption when they come here and live in the open. These are only a few of many similar statements made to me about the Indians by their friends.

Amazing is the ignorance of the Indian. There in these festivals you see the young dancing with their feet to the wailing songs of the old squaws, the same kind of dances their forefathers danced fifty, sixty, seventy, years ago. Instead of being men and women they seem to be just little children. As lambs they are led to the slaughter by the sins of the white man. The Christian church must go in and put her strong arm between these Indians and sin, ignorance and superstition. It must go in, else the Indian shall be wiped off the face of the earth. The reason the old western proverb "There is no good Indian except a dead Indian" has such a universal acceptation is because the American Indian, unless helped by the Christian day school, the Christian church and the Christian missionary, will never be able to help himself. The white man's sins will smite the red man down before he has time to open his eyes to see the white man's virtues. God sped the glorious work of the American missionary for the salvation of the red man and the red woman! These poor aborigines are being tumbled into drunkard's graves by the white man's whiskey; they are being morally corrupted by the white man's licentiousness; they are being ground down into misery and want by the hell fires of the white man's gambling passions, which are destroying their lives for this world and for the next. It is impossible for some men to overcome some temptations in their own strength.

But, thank God, the dangers and temptations that surround you and me are not insurmountable, if we only call on God for help. The true father places the strong arm about his boy's head when the surges of temptation roll in to submerge him. God the Father will throttle the hissing throat of the death by serpent of evil if we will only beg him to rescue us. He will take away that agonizing thirst for drink. We know you have been fighting it for years. Yes, he will make you pure in the heart if you only run to the cover of his wings. He will lift you up, as you would run to the rescue of your boy when he is confronting some sudden and imminent danger. If you will only call to him as your child calls to you: "Help, father! Help! Help!" The Lord sends us trouble to develop us, not to crush us. Those overwhelming mountains of trouble and temptation that are rolled upon us do not proceed from his hand. Those mountains, these insurmountable mountains of temptation, are everywhere around. Then it behooves us to stay very close to the side of that loving Father who is always thinking and planning for us. Stay by the Lord, who will always protect us when it is necessary for us to be spiritually protected.

"The threatening dangers ahead in the Christian's life are insignificant in comparison to the peril from which Christ delivered him in the past, when he said to him, "Thy sins are forgiven thee." Those ahead may be compared to the ship in the last throes of the tornado. The cargo is being stricken down to the utmost. The sails, like huge balloons filled with gas, are swelling larger and larger, until they seem about to burst. The helmsmen are clinging frantically to the wheel. The great masts and the planks of the hull are groaning, while the huge waves toss it as a chip is turned a somersault over the mill wheel. All is anxiety. The pumps are at work. The danger is great and there is yet far ahead. With a strong keel under him and the sails still holding to the masts, the sea captain has hope, no matter how great may be the shrieking of the euroclydon.

Let us return to the peaceful scene of my text. As we climb the Judaean hills, where sits the shepherd poet watching his sheep, we see a transcendent beauty shining from the face of the Psalmist. We look at his raptured face a moment. Then we ask: "What is it, David? What do you see? What do you hear? What treasure is yours?" He looks about at first dazed. Then he comes back to earth as he answers: "Why, I was softly singing to myself that Fortieth Psalm I composed it many years ago. I did not then realize all I wrote. When I came to the words, 'The Lord thinketh upon me,' I began to summarize all the care God has taken of me in this world. Then I began to see visions of the glories of the land which he is preparing for me beyond. God is thinking of me. Yes, he is preparing them all for me when the right time comes for me to possess them. Look, canest you see those glories now?" As David talks his interpretation of my text seems very plain and very simple. God is again dealing with us as a father would deal with his child.

God says, "Nothing is too good for his children when the right time comes." So he thinks ahead and plans ahead for us. When the right time comes—and come it will—God is going to give us a great unselfishness. Yes; you can picture it—a white marble palace, with mosaic floors and rainbowed fountains. It may have terraced gardens surrounding it. Our palace will be as good as that. There is nothing too good for God's heavenly children. There he is going to give us health—immortal health. No pain, no suffering, no heartache, is to be there. Nothing is, then, too good for us when the right time comes. Then he is going to give us back our loved ones. Some of us are somewhat lonely here. Some of us are lonely then. Nothing will then be too good for us in celestial companionship. Then God will give us crowns. Then we shall have endless communion with his own dear self. Oh, my friends, will you not let God go on planning for you and thinking for you? Was it to be wondered at that the radiant face we saw as we climbed the Judaean hills and looked at the shepherd poet of Israel was celestial in its reflection when we realize that David was catching a glimpse about what the Lord was planning for him beyond the grave? Will you let God plan for you such a future?

The Parent of Radium.

If the earth, says Professor E. Rutherford, were supposed to have been composed initially or pure radium the time it would take for the heat and be greater than the activity observed in pitchblende to-day. And since there is no doubt that the earth's age vastly exceeds 20,000 years it is necessary in order to account for the existence of radium at all in the earth to suppose that it is continuously produced from some other substance. On this supposition time it seems most probable that uranium is this parent substance. The observed activity in a good specimen of pitchblende is about what should be expected if the uranium contained in it spontaneously broke up into radium. Radium itself is continuously transformed into an emanation, which in turn is changed into other types of matter, and there is no evidence that the process is reversible.

Tennis was played in London in the sixteenth century in covered courts erected for the purpose.

Torturing Neuralgia.

SUFFERED FOR TEN YEARS, CURED BY DR. WILLIAMS' PINK PILLS.

Neuralgia is the king of tortures. A tingling of the tender skin, a sudden stab from some angry nerve; then piercing paroxysms of pain—that is neuralgia. The cause of trouble is disordered nerves due to thin watery blood. The cure is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills which build rich red blood, and thus soothe and strengthen the nerves, driving out pain and cure neuralgia. Among the thousands who have proven that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure neuralgia is Mrs. Thomas Hall, of Napanee, Ont. Mrs. Hall says: "For upwards of ten years I was a sufferer from the awful pain of neuralgia. Sometimes I would be unable to leave my room for a cold wave would set me in agony. I had a bad set of teeth and consulted with two physicians, but they did not help me. I then tried a number of so-called medicines, but found no benefit. The trouble continued at intervals for ten years, when I was induced to take a couple of boxes of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and was surprised to find that they relieved me. I continued taking them for about two months, when I found myself entirely cured. I feel safe in saying that the cure was permanent." Mrs. Johnson is one of the best known ladies in the section in which she resides, and her unsolicited testimonial is a most convincing proof that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure neuralgia. Nothing but Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will cure, and Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will cure every form of neuralgia, sciatica, rheumatism, sciatica, neuralgia, St. Vitus' dance, nervousness, kidney and liver troubles, anaemia, and the many troubles that make women's lives miserable. The pink tint to the cheeks comes with Pink Pills and the genuine always have the full name on the wrapper around each box. Sold by all druggists or sent by mail at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, by writing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

TREACHEROUS PEAT BOGS.

A Gruesome Tradition About the Battle of Solway.

There is an ancient and gruesome tradition connected with this story of the battle of Solway. This battle was fought on the "debatable" borderland between England and Scotland in the year 1542. A band of borderers, heavily mounted and heavily armored was put to rout. In the panic of their flight they floundered into a peat bog. The bog trembled beneath the feet of their chargers and opened and swallowed them, horses and horsemen, arms and all. To-day the peat bog is more than 200 years later, at the end of the eighteenth century, a digger of peat came upon one of the troop—a man and his horse, both in coverings of armor and preserved from total decay by the antiseptic qualities of the peat. Another story of that peat bog of the Solway Firth is that in November, 1771, that bog, surcharged with the moisture of heavy rains, rose, swelled and burst like a torrent, sweeping along with it trees and houses and destroying thirty small villages.

Many thousands of acres of peat are found in the north German lowland. In Ireland estimates place the lowland bog area at 1,576,000 acres and the highland area at 1,254,000 acres. Russia is said to have 6,700 square miles of peat. Several million acres are in Norway and Sweden, France and Holland. The United States and Canada also have extensive tracts. Peat has been used by artisans for ages in the manufacture of tools. By burning peat the old steel workers produced the finest grades of steel. Based on account of the intensity of the heat produced and the absence of anything detrimental to the metal. The elastic and keen Damascus swords are believed to have been made by the use of peat.

Peat itself is the product which results from the partial decay of vegetable matter in marshes and other marsh plants—which grows and dies in boggy places where the water stands. It is chiefly composed of sphagnum, or bog moss. This moss is peculiarly absorptive properties owing to the cuplike arrangement of its parts, which take up and hold water like a sponge. Sphagnum continues to grow after its roots have become detached from the ground. These two qualities explain why bogs occasionally slide from their old beds.

PRAIRIE DOGS.

Choked Up a River While Traveling From Oklahoma to Texas.

"The prairie dog migration from Oklahoma to southwestern Texas during the fall of 1874, eclipsed anything of that sort witnessed by white men in this country," said a veteran who saw it. "Millions of the frisky little barkers were driven out of their old pastures or perhaps feared the approaching legions of home seekers would surely exterminate the dogs and blow up the dog towns. The prairie dog migration from the north to the southwest lasted six days during the month of July, 1874. The traveling dogs struck the Red river and interfered to a great extent with the cattle that came to that stream to quench their thirst. Some cowboys that were on the banks of Red river during the time when the prairie dogs swam across say that the stream was choked with the little rascals for many miles up and down the river. The thirsty cattle were either unable or unwilling to stick their mouths into the water. The dog nose is a sensitive organ. The cowboys were getting ready to drive the famishing stock to a distant stream, but the Red river became clear of the prairie dog swimmers after blocking the useful drinking place for about a week. It was generally supposed that the dogs halted when they had reached the staked plains of Texas."

The Pin Is England.

The date of the first manufacture of pins in England is shrouded in uncertainty, but it is authentically recorded that as early as 1464, when money was "tight," extensive cloth workers, compelled their laborers to accept in payment for their work pins, girdles and other unprofitable wares instead of money." The march of improvement had begun and the spirit of steadily until the middle of the sixteenth century pins began to win appreciation so high that statutes were enacted protecting their manufacture, and rigid laws were passed prohibiting the importation of numerous minor articles, including pins, gloves, knives, tailors' shears, scissors and irons. Up to this period female dress was fastened with ribbons, laces, clasps, hooks and eyes and skewers of brass, silver and gold. The latter were, in fact, pins without heads.—London Globe.

CURES CATARRHAL DEAFNESS.

ONE WEEK'S USE OF HYOMEI DID MORE THAN SIX MONTHS' TREATMENT BY SPECIALISTS.

In the treatment of deafness which is often a result of catarrh, Hyomei acts almost immediately upon the inflamed membranes and the hearing begins to return at once.

Miss Meeks, of Matteewan, N. Y., says: "Hyomei is truly wonderful. I have used it but a short time and see a great change in my condition. The hearing is improving quickly and I had no idea I would improve so rapidly in so short a time. Myrtle Watch which was very offensive to myself and others, has left its head out entirely. I have spent a great deal of money with catarrh specialists and can truly say that six months of their treatment is not equal to one month of Hyomei."

A complete outfit costs but $1.00, and consists of an inhaler that may be carried in the vest pocket, a medicine dropper, and a bottle of Hyomei. The inhaler will last a lifetime and there is enough Hyomei for ordinary needs. Additional bottles of Hyomei can be secured for 50 cents. Compare this small expense with the free charges for specialists.

If you cannot obtain Hyomei of your dealer, it will be forwarded by mail, postage paid, on receipt of price. Don't delay for more information than will entitle you to services of our medical department, free of charge. The R. T. Booth Company, Hyomei Building, Ithaca, N.Y.

They Are Not Violent in Action. Some persons, when they wish to cleanse the stomach, resort to Epsom and other purgative salts. These are strong in their action, but seldom permanent good. They produce copious chills, and if persisted in they injure the stomach. Not so with pills upon the instances in a beneficial way. Tarrant's Seltzer Aperient will answer all purposes in this respect, and have no sufferer.

An Evil to Billous Headache—Biliousness, which is caused by excessive acidity in the stomach, has a marked effect upon the nerves and often manifests itself by severe headaches. This is the most distressing headache one can have. There are headaches from cold, from fever, and from other causes, but the most excruciating of all is the bilious headache. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills relieve one of this and almost immediately. It will disappear as soon as a dose has been taken. There is nothing surer in the treatment of bilious headache.

COUNTRY LIFE AND LUNACY.

(London Telegraph.)

Those who view the increase of insanity in these islands with alarm are apt to attribute the deplorable growth of lunacy to the pressure of modern life, and especially the struggle for existence in great cities. They picture the simple countryman living he "simple life" in reasonable content and keeping a sound mind in a healthy body, while the dweller in crowded areas succumbs to nervous strain. Upon this picture the fifty-ninth report of the Commissioners in Lunacy turns the hard light of facts. According to this summary of the year's records of insanity it is the countryman who goes mad soonest on the average, while the much-pitied townsman, in spite of strain and competition, remains sane enough to be called upon to look after him. "There is no apparent relationship between the density of population and the ratio of insanity," the commissioners boldly declare. "Many of the sparsely populated countries give the highest proportion of insane to their respective populations."

CAMDEN EAST.

The famous Eggard Family, musical entertainers and bell ringers, will give an entertainment at Hinch's Hall, Camden East, on Friday, November 10th, under the auspices of the Guild of St. Luke's church. They draw immense audiences wherever they go. Admission, adults 25c, children 15c. All are welcome. Doors open at 7.30 p.m. A most enjoyable evening may be confidently anticipated.

Thanksgiving Day, Oct. 26th, was a red Letter in the history of the Parish of Camden East, when many services were held in the beautiful Parish church of St. Luke. The services were an inspiration. The decorations were in excellent taste, reflecting great credit on the ladies who attended to this department of church work. The music was hearty, congregational and good, and the attendance especially large. Rubrycals has been received. The Rev. Rural Dean Anderson, Rector of Morrisburg, was the special preacher for the occasion, and his sermons were most uplifting, instructive and practical, a benediction to all fortunate enough to hear them. The offerings were the best in many years, reaching the grand sum of nearly $150.00, with many more good friends to hear from. The Rector, Rev. C. E. S. Baldelff, Wardens, Messrs. Roy Smith, and J. H. Mowbray, and the Lay Readers Mr. S. Greenway, tender their best and heartiest thanks to all who so kindly and liberally assisted to reduce the church debt. The weather and roads were excellent, thank God.

Service at the Orange Hall, Hinch, Friday, Nov. 3d, at 7.30 p.m. All are welcome.

REDVILLE.

Service was held in Knox church on Thanksgiving day.

INFLUENZA SEASON.

London Morning Leader.

Influenza, in severe and slighter manifestations, says Dr. Greenfield in the British Medical Journal, has invaded us on the rise in temperature.

To those who may be suffering from this sickness, and who may be disposed at the first onset to try the cure for a severe relief, a warning, printed in the same number of the Lancet, may be timely. The warning also applies to those who use eucalyptus as a domestic remedy for colds.

"It is very probable," says the Lancet, "that too heavy and too frequent inhalations taken by those who employ it as a remedy for colds, or who use it owing to saturate a lump of sugar with the oil, may even reproduce a grave form of poisoning by eucalyptus is mentioned. Under the opinion of Dr. Laudler Brunton on the tonic properties of the oil are quoted the facts that eucalyptus is a powerful physician, 'after absorption it appears to act chiefly on the brain and centres, depressing paralysis and death, and liberally assisted in the spinal cord its depressing action on the heart. Dr. Brunton says that it abolishes reflex action, even when it has been produced by strychnine, and that from depression of the brain, medulla and spinal cord it produces death by paralysis, lowered blood pressure, and failure of respiration. Death occurs from paralysis of the respiration.' Those who use eucalyptus are probably little aware of the terrors that lie hidden in the oil.

A BLIND TIGER.

The so-called "Tiger" chocolates' which have recently grown into popular favor in London contain from 10 to 15 per cent. of pure alcohol. Until a few years ago, each one contained, it is said, a dram of alcohol, sufficient by a hardened toper to be literally licked out. The manufacturers, however, have extensively reduced the quantity of alcohol, their reason being that the public will not pay for it, the same reason is probable. However, the traffic should be condemned in other and more important grounds of morality than that of expediency, namely that it is a dangerous form of child poisoning in the case of young children, or to the unwary adult, who can get a dram of alcohol habit in other pre-sense.—London 'Lancet.'

BABY AWAKENING.

It ought to be a pleasure to look forward to baby's awakening. He should awaken bright, smiling and full of fun, refreshed by sleep and ready for a good time. How many parents dread a child's voice, because they know when he awakes he will cry and fret and keep everyone else from sleeping. Baby frets for the same reason that grown people do, because the nerves are exhausted. Nothing will quiet a peevish baby like Baby's Own Tablets. They make baby sleep, giving her the tablets, she is perfectly well, sleeps soundly all night, and wakes up bright and fresh in the morning. Baby's Own Tablets are a safe medicine for children of all ages. They cannot do anything but good. You can get them from your druggist, or by mail at 25 cents a box by writing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

"THE ARRIVAL OF KITTY."

A good play was put on the boards at the Bridge Opera House, on Wednesday evening to a small but very appreciative audience, the attract on being a farce-comedy entitled "The Arrival of Kitty." The characters were all well taken, especially Fred. R. Wren, as Col. Bell, who kept the audience in tears of laughter throughout the play. The Arrival of Kitty is one of the most laughable farces imaginable. The costumes were fine and we predict a bumper house should they play a return engagement. We have so many poor shows it's hard to tell what will be good, but if we were always sure of as good a show as the Arrival of Kitty, Napanee would have better reputation as a show-town.

A SPORTSMAN'S NUMBER.

The November Canadian Magazine is almost a sportsman's issue. Erwyn Sandys, a Canadian who won fame on "Outing", and who is the author of several sporting books, contributes a witty and informing story of a day's "Wildfowling in Manitoba." Professor Roberts, whose animal books are well known, describes a bird tragedy under the title "The Terroll of the Air." Osborne Jackson has an account of the semi-annual migration of the caribou. Dr. Grant pleads for Canada's fast-disappearing big game. This is illustrated by J. W. Beatty. W. A. Fraser, that prince of short story writers, has a collie story which is both dramatic and touching. Besides these animal stories, Joseph W. Claw writes entertainingly about "Golf in Canada," mingling his history with fine descriptions. This is illustrated with portraits of nearly all the golfers who have won fame in the game.

THE MEDAL CONTEST.

The elocutionary contest in the Town Hall, under the auspices of the Epworth League of the Eastern Methodist church on Tuesday night, was well attended and proved a most enjoyable evening. There were six contestants for the silver medal given to the best elocutionist, the recitations dealing on the subject of temperance and under the rules prescribed in "Temple Elocution." The Judges were Dr. Wartman and Messrs. J. E. Robinson and A. C. Bateson. Miss Edith Robinson, South Napanee, was awarded the medal. The other contestants were Miss Emsley, Miss Edna French, Miss Abell, and Messrs. Chas. Black and Harold Baughan. The medal was presented by Miss Robinson, by Rev. Hugh Cairns. Mr. S. D. Abell presided as popular and efficient chairman, and an excellent programme of instrumental and vocal music interspersed the different recitations.

SUDDEN CALL HOME.

It is our painful duty to record the very sudden death of Jesse Russell Baird, only daughter of William W. and Estella Baird, North Fredericksburgh, aged one year and nine months, who went to sleep in Jesus on Saturday morning, Oct. 28th, 1905. This unusually bright and affectionate child was in comparatively good health until about twenty-five hours previous to the lamentable death. Her disease was consumption of the brain, which caused most extreme suffering. She was the third one bearing the name of Jean Russell, who has passed to her eternal rest a few years ago. In the home besides the bereaved parents are the grandmother, Mrs. Wm. M. and two little brothers, William Lawrence and Samuel James. The funeral, conducted by Rev. J. R. Real, of the Western church, Napanee, took place at the house at 1.30 p.m., and was well attended by many sympathizing friends, from whence the remains were taken to the vault of Morven cemetery. —Com.

ARMOUR & CO. IN CANADA.

The demand for Armour's Extract of Beef and Beef Juice products in Canada has led to the establishment of a branch of their business in Toronto, under the name of Armour Limited. The firm of Armour Limited is a member of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association so that the "Made in Canada" label now applies to all Armour's Extract of products in this country. The Armour Co. is the largest concern in Canada which makes its own Extract of Beef. The name Armour has been synonymous for 40 years with all that is best in the slaughter and curing of meats. In making Armour's Extract of Beef every feature of appearance and color is sacrificed to retain the rich flavor of the meat. It has a dark color, caused by the high concentration, but a very small quantity will go farther and impart better flavor than double the quantity of most other brands. It is admitted by all the most eminent authorities that Extract of Beef made from the coarse and practically wild cattle of South America and Australasia, cannot possibly equal in substance and flavor that produced from the well-fattened and graded beeves of America.

LENNOX AND ADDINGTON TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION.

A large number of teachers from the rural schools attended the sessions of the Association held in the Collegiate Institute, last week.

In the absence of the President, C. H. Edwards, D. A. Nesbitt occupied the chair.

After the usual routine business, Mr. Nesbitt, delegate to the Ontario Educational Association, Toronto, gave a report of the proceedings. A noticeable feature of some of the addresses given there was the disapproval of the low salaries offered to teachers, as a result the best men were not entering the profession with a view to permanency, but engage in it only as a preparatory step to something more remunerative.

In speaking on the "New Regulations," Inspector Burrows spoke several points of advantage to the teacher. Spoke briefly on "Written Agreements," different kinds of certificates, prescribed text books, discipline, half yearly examinations.

Mr. Flach dealt with the mathematical part of the curriculum.

Regrets were expressed that in the new programme, some very important subjects had been omitted for Entrance examinations.

A paper on "Writing", by Mr. Angerson, recommended the muscular movement being practised daily in order to gain freedom with the pen.

"Science in the Public Schools," by Mr. Hedley, entered largely into nature study, impressed the importance of the child's observing powers being trained, finding out the habits of certain animals, birds, insects, making comparisons of plant and animal life and form.

"Art and Color Work," taken by the Misses Cryeler, Harrison and Parks, showed how the cultivation of the esthetic taste was helpful in advancing the more prosaic work of the school. Samples of drawing and color work done by the children were exhibited by Miss Cryeler, Miss Harrison, Mr. Anderson, and grs. 8 Ont. and Three East Model School, Napanee. Natural study collections of specimens of cocoons, butterflies, mothes, seeds, corals, kelp-yields and also fish were also exhibited by East Ward School.

In the evening a very successful session was held in the Town Hall. Addresses were given by the Rev. Mr. Real, Rev. Mr. Cotton and Mr. Emsley. The organ solo by Miss Hall, and the vocal selections by Messrs. Carson, Graham, Black, Wager, Fraser and Mrs. Vandervoort, were much appreciated.

The committee of management wish to express their thanks to all those who assisted in making the programme so interesting. A vote of thanks was tendered those taking part in the evening programme, also to the trustees of the S. S. church, for the use of the hall.

The officers elected were,

President—Mr. Hedley.
Vice President—Miss Cryeler.
Secretary Treasurer—Miss E. M. Hall.
Auditors—Messrs. Flach and Anderson.

Inspector Burrows was appointed a delegate to the O. E. A., Toronto.

LITTLE CREEK.

The fall ploughing is nearly completed throughout the neighborhood.

Hallowe'en passed off rather quietly, although some of the boys amused themselves at other's expense. Kinds do not carry your sport so far the next time, boys.

Mr. C. W. Miller is now gooses sor of late John Miller, sadly having bought out his brother's interest. Mr. Elmore Miller is taking up his residence on the Palace Road.

Mr. Oliver Culley is busy moving from the Filley farm into Napanee.

The sympathy of the whole community is extended to Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Baird, in the loss of their little daughter. She was a bright lovable little girl of two years. The funeral on Sunday was largely attended.

Music was made in Morven.

Misses Jessie Joyce and Mary Wilson returned to Belleville on Monday, where they are attending college.

Messrs. Dunbar & Bone have finished their green house, and are busy fitting it with green vegetables for the winter market.

COMMON ERRORS IN SPEECH.

Who does not make errors in everyday speech? As a matter of fact it is very unusual to find any person whose use of the English language is absolutely correct. The following are examples of some very frequent errors or faulty expressions often heard:

"Lot you and I go"—should be "you and me."

"I am as good as her"—should be "as she."

"You are younger than me"—should be "than I."

"Come to dinner with John and I"—should be "John and me."

"Between you and I"—should be "you and me."

"Where are you going? Who? Me?—should be "Who? I?"

"Who do you see?"—should be "whom."

"If I was her" — should be "If I were she."

"Was it him?"—should be "Was it he?"

"Who was it by?" should be "whom."

These examples of "Faulty Diction" are so common that many people seek upon the improper form as being the correct one, and Thomas H. Russell, LL.D., editor-in-chief of Webster's Imperial Dictionary, has done the public a great service in having written a new book, entitled "Faulty Diction, or Errors in the Use of the English Language and How to Correct Them," which the publishers have, by printing it on thin Bible paper, succeeded in getting it into neat may be called Vest-Pocket size.

It is handsomely bound in embossed Russia leather and with its semi-flexible back it lies neat in the hand. Address by Geo. W. Ogilvie & Co., Publishers, 57 E. Randolph St., Chicago, Ill. They also publish the same book in cloth binding and will send a copy of it in that style on receipt of 25c.

ANOTHER HUNTER SHOT.

Sault Ste. Marie, Nov. 8—The list of hunting fatalities has been increased by the death of a fifteen-year-old boy, named John Vaughan, who received at Echo Bay, east of here, yesterday. The boy was shot through the head by the accidental discharge of a rifle he had taken with him on a boat on the Echo River on a deer-hunting trip. It is supposed that the boy was tired from the boat up on the shore for rest, and drawing it toward him by the gun and drawing it toward himself, so that the trigger caught, causing the gun to go off with fatal results. Help was called, and was found lying dead by the boat. Thomas Vaughan, who is in the employ of the McKinnon Dry Dock Company, Echo Bay, was an only son. Mr. and Mrs. Vaughan brought the body to the Soo Sunday and will have it taken to their former home at Slittsville, Ontario, for interment.

FAMOUS PEOPLE

BARONESS BURDETT-COUTTS

The World's Greatest Woman Philanthropist

Angela Georgiana, Baroness Burdett-Coutts, the lady bountiful of England, and one of the partners in the great banking house of Coutts—second only, in wealth, to the Bank of England—and one of the richest peeresses in the kingdom, has had a romantic and remarkable career in her ninety-odd years. She was a close friend of Queen Victoria, and Edward VII. said of her: "Next to my mother, she is the most wonderful woman in England."

She was the daughter of Sir Francis Burdett, and Sophia Coutts; her maternal grandfather, Thomas Coutts, died ignoring his children, and leaving his great fortune to his second wife, who was Miss Mellon, a well-known actress. The widow later married the Duke of St. Albans, whose relatives carried on the feud and contempt for her verbal inaccuracies, her quaint speeches and her inability to master the social code of her set. Her will revealed her revenge when it was found that every penny of her fortune went to her step-granddaughter, Angela Burdett, then twenty-three, with the understanding that she should add a hyphen and Coutts to her name.

Then Miss Burdett-Coutts, in 1837, the year Victoria became Queen, began her life of benevolence and beneficence, limiting herself to no one phase of her philanthropy; but wherever she could benefit humanity her heart and her purse were open. She built and endowed St. Stephen's Church, Westminster; endowed three colonial bishoprics, secured the government adoption of traveling inspectors of schools, gave funds for the topographic survey of Jerusalem, aided emigrants on a large scale, established a home for women, provided hundreds of boys for the navy, suggested the formation of the East London Weavers' Association, erected model tenements, aided Sir Samuel Baker in his work in Sarawak, helped the starving fishermen of Cape Clear Island and the poor of London and Scotland, organized the Turkish Compassionate Fund to help the peasantry during the Russo-Turkish war, and for nearly seventy years has devoted herself to charities.

In 1871 the Queen made Miss Coutts a peeress, and two years later, when she was sixty-seven years of age, she married W. L. Ashmead-Bartlett, a young American—now a member of Parliament—thirty-seven years her junior, settling on him an annuity of $250,000 a year. Surprise became consternation, and, later, genuine hostility, when it became known that the Baroness, after nursing young Bartlett through a long illness incident to his work on her Turkish bath, had married him.

Entered according to Act of the Parliament of Canada, in the year 1905, by W. C. Mack, at the Department of Agriculture.

When Cowan found that his bride-to-be was dead and buried he showed no grief, but started after a fifteen-minute interview, without saying that he would return.

The stone-cutters of Toronto this week struck against the use of a stone-planing machine. Their objection is in connection with the introduction of sewing machines: it may be interesting to recall the first strike that occurred in Toronto, which was in 1847. In that year the tailoring firm of Wanless and Hall introduced the first city the first sewing machine ever seen here. There was an instant revolt, all those employed in the tailoring firm striking, and so serious was the firm backed down, and turned over the machines to them, which they broke as they liked. The men to signalize their victory held a procession along King street, displaying the offending machine, which they did not destroy, but carried back to the factory whence it had come. The firm gave a banquet to the victorious journeymen, and the result promised that sewing machines would never again be introduced. Progress has made at that supper, had they been accepted, would have made interesting reading now. That triumphant procession paraded the entire King street on which the striking stonecutters are walking to-day.

CONCERT AT NEWBURGH.

A grand concert will be given in the Methodist church, Newburgh, on Thursday evening, 14th Nov., under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid. The concert will be conducted under the able management of Mr. R. S. Beake, of Woodstock, Ont., who will be assisted by Miss Martha P. Powell, soprano soloist, and Miss Mabel Stanley, Longard, head of the elocution department of Michigan Conservatory of Music. The press speaks highly of these artists and the entertainment given. STELLA.

Many are the complaints made in reference to the accommodation offered on the Bay of Quinte route. In the summer season when the traffic is comparatively small, we have the North King and Caspian, but when more are most needed, owing to the large quantity of apples, they are taken off and only the Aletha, which is all very well in fair weather, to accommodate us. Tuesday of last week she carried 800 bbls. of apples together with the usual amount of freight, passengers having to climb over such freight to get on board. Surely the company need not treat us in any such way, and, though our present autumn gales this small craft endangers lives making the trip through all kinds of weather. Such are the joys of being Islanders.

Mrs. W. Hubble has returned to Kingston, after spending a pleasant visit with her brother, Mr. S. Spera, at her old home.

Miss G. Smith, of Buffalo, is the guest of Mrs. S. McDonald.

A baby girl has come to gladden the home of Mr. R. Pringle, Jr.

Halloween was mildly (?) observed in our midst.

The farm owned by Mr. John Hein is again changing hands. Mr. H. Burns, having had it rented for the past three years, is removing to Stella, and Mr. Balch, of Bath, is taking possession this week.

Arthur Kilpatrick, of the 2d concession, is under the Dr.'s care. Also Roy Gilnam, of the North Shore.

The managers of the R. A. P. B. ball are still quite a disappointed lot this Friday evening. Owing to the fierce gale which blew, there was no way which make it impossible for the orchestra of Kingston to come. Local talent was procured and all enjoyed themselves. Mrs. J. M'Farren served supper in the Town Hall, in her usual good style, to about forty couples.

AT THE SEASON'S CLOSE.

"We were a saucy bunch," quoth he,
"Before we got our pull back.
Two of us fell overboard in the—
Our center and our full-back.

"How many are there on your team?"
I asked the teacher one day.
"How many did you have before
They put you to the fray?"

"Alas!" said he, "a few are here,
And some, I trust, in Heaven.
Before the season's done, I'm
I think we were eleven."

Our right guard broke his vertebrae,
But left guard broke my arm.
I'm the only player left
Who has not met with harm."

I sought to ascertain from him
How many were in Heaven,
But he would only say, sadly,
"Kind sir, we were eleven."

Impoverished Soil

Impoverished soil, like impoverished blood, needs a proper fertilizer. A chemist by analyzing the soil can tell you what fertilizer to use for different products.

If your blood is impoverished your doctor will tell you what you need to fertilize it and give it the rich, red corpuscles that are lacking in it. It may be you need a tonic, but more likely you need a concentrated fat food, and fat is the element lacking in your system.

There is no fat food that is so easily digested and assimilated as

Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil

It will nourish and strengthen the body when milk and cream fail to do it. Scott's Emulsion is always the same; always palatable and always beneficial where the body is wasting from any cause, either in children or adults.

We will send you a sample free.

Be sure that this picture in the form of a label is on the wrapper of every bottle of Emulsion you buy.

CANADA'S BEST.

There is nothing more necessary to busy people for the strenuous life of modern times than good food. Man physically should be like a well regulated machine and nothing contributes to this end more than food that is not only pleasing to the taste but that also strengthens and nourishes. It has been demonstrated that there is no other food made from flour so rich in nutriment and body-building elements as are soda biscuits. This is saying much for ordinary crackers are much more for Mooney's Perfection Cream Sodas, which are daily compounded as the most perfect soda biscuit of all Canada. They are not only delicious, delightful to the taste and always welcome. Being a perfect food, highly nourishing and easily digested, they are fitted to repair wasted strength, preserve health and prolong life. Mooney's Sodas are the result of years of study of hygienic methods in producing superior crackers. They are manufactured in the cleanest and best equipped bakeries in all Canada. The workmen are the most skilled on the continent, and the materials used are of a very high order. The flour is a special blend, milled only for the Mooney factory, and the butter and cream are procured direct from the famous dairies of Western Ontario. Not an ounce of "inferior butter" finds its way into Mooney goods. The materials being balanced, the result is digested and converted into brain, nerve and brain. No other soda cracker can compare with them and the delicate receiver such a generous welcome at a table where they have once become known.

HOT FOOTBALL.

On Thursday, Oct. 26, before a small but enthusiastic crowd of supporters, the fighting Eleven of representing the N.C.I. succeeded in defeating the A.L. team by the score of 11 to 0. Sunday's game was played on the Toronto Rugby Union grounds, and was the closest game of the season. The A.L. team was strengthened by the addition of Ellis, Dorman and Wilson, who contributed chiefly to their victory. Although Ranger, Capt. of the N.C.I. Junior Football Team, and Clark, our speedy centre forward, worked like Trojans, they were unable to withstand the rushes of O'Neill and Texas Assegame. At half time it looked easily even that the terrible seven by A.L. was doing on the less experienced players of N.C.I. Two touchdowns after Referee Gibson blew his whistle. Dorman by a most superhuman effort succeeded in getting over the line, and when Laughlin neatly converted the game was nearly up to the end of the first half. The second half was a repetition of the first, except that Ellis added 5 to the total of A.L. Time keepers for all games—Ernie Sawyers for A.L., and Ernie Hall for N.C.I. Referee—Gibson. Umpires—Ellis for A.L., Emsley, Murphy, McGregor, McLaughlin and Berger for N.C.I. Touchdowns—Dorman, Assegame, Kinnaird, Laughlin, Sawyer, Texas Assegame, Clark, McLeod, Hazell, Dafoe, Cook, Embury, Coxall.—Com.

BREWSTER'S MILLIONS

"It seems that Sedgwick never married. Your mother was his sister and his only known relative of close connection. He was a man of most peculiar temperament, but in full possession of his mental faculties. You may find this will to be a strange document, but I think Mr. Jones, the executor, explains any mystery that may be suggested by its terms. While Sedgwick's whereabouts were unknown to his old friends in New York, it seems that he was fully posted on all that was going on here. He knew that you were the only child of your mother and therefore his only nephew. He set forth the causes of your mother's marriage, of your birth, of the death of Robert Brewster and of Mrs. Brewster. He also was aware of the fact that old Edwin Peter Brewster intended to bequeath a large fortune to you, and thereby hangs a tale. Sedgwick was proud. When he lived in New York he was regarded as the kind of man who never forgave the person who touched roughly upon his pride. You know, of course, that your father married Miss Sedgwick in the face of the most bitter opposition on the part of Edwin Brewster. The latter refused to recognize her as his daughter, practically disowned his son and heaped the harshest kind of calumny upon the Sedgwicks. It was commonly believed in this town that Jim Sedgwick left the country three or four years after the marriage for the sole reason that Edwin Brewster could not live in the same place. So deep was his hatred of the old man that he fled to escape killing him. It was known that upon one occasion he visited the office of his sister's enemy for the purpose of slaying him, but something prevented. He carried that hatred to the grave, as you will see."

Montgomery Brewster was trying to gather himself together from within the fog which made himself and the world unreal.

"I believe I'd like to have you read this extract—the will, Mr. Grant," he said, with an effort to hold his nerves in bridle.

Mr. Grant cleared his throat and began in his stiff voice. Once he looked up to find his listener once and again to find him grown indifferent. He wondered dimly if this were a pose.

In brief, the will of James T. Sedgwick bequeathed certain real and personal, of which he died possessed to his only nephew, Montgomery Brewster of New York, son of Robert and Louise Sedgwick Brewster, supplementing this all important clause there was a set of conditions governing the final disposition of the estate. The most extraordinary of these conditions was the one which required the heir to be absolutely penniless upon the twenty-fifth anniversary of his birth, Sept. 23.

The instrument went into detail in respect to this supreme condition. It set forth that Montgomery Brewster was to have no other worldly possession than the clothes which covered him on the September day named. He was to begin that day without a penny to his name, without a single article of jewelry, furniture or finance that he could call his own or could thereafter reclaim. At 9 o'clock, New York time, on the morning of Sept. 23 the executor, under the provisions of the will, was to make over and transfer to Montgomery Brewster all of the moneys, lands, bonds and interests mentioned in the inventory which accompanied the will. In the event that Montgomery Brewster had not in every particular complied with the requirements of the will to the full satisfaction of the said executor, Swearengen Jones, the estate was to be distributed among certain institutions of charity designated in the instrument. Under no circumstances was injunction of James Sedgwick was plainly discernible the motive that prompted it. In almost so many words he declared that his heir should not receive the fortune if he possessed a single penny that had come to him in any shape or form from the man he hated, Edwin Peter Brewster. While Sedgwick could not have known at the time of his death that the banker had bequeathed $1,000,000 to his grandson, it was more than apparent that he expected the young man to be enriched liberally by his enemy. It was to preclude any possible chance of the mingling of his fortune with the smallest portion of Edwin P. Brewster's that James Sedgwick on his death-bed put his hand to this astonishing instrument.

There was also a clause in which he undertook to dictate the manner in which Montgomery Brewster during the year leading up to his twenty-sixth anniversary. He required that the young man should give satisfactory evidence to the executor that he was capable of managing his affairs shrewdly and wisely; that he possessed the ability to add to the fortune through his own enterprise; that he should come to his twenty-sixth anniversary with a fair name and a record free from the grosser forms of dissipation; that his habits be temperate; that he possess nothing at the end of the year which might be regarded as visible or invisible asset; that he make no endowments; that he give sparingly to charity; that he neither lend nor give away money, for four months it might be returned to him later; that he live on the principle which inspires a man to "get his money's worth," in the purchase of that of which these conditions were prescribed for but a single year in the life of the heir, it was evident that Mr. Brewster did not intend to impose any restrictions after the property had gone into his hands.

"How do you like it?" asked Mr. Grant as he passed the will to Brewster.

The latter took the paper and glanced over it with the air of one who had heard but had not fully grasped its meaning.

"It must be a joke, Mr. Grant," he said, still groping with difficulty through the fog.

"No, Mr. Brewster, it is absolutely genuine. Here is a telegram from the probate court in Sedgwick's home county, received in response to a query from us. It says that the will is to be filed for probate and that Mr. Sedgwick was many times a millionaire. This statement, which he calls an inventory, enumerates his holdings and their value, and the footing shows $8,500,000 in round numbers. The investments, you see, are gilt edged. There is not a bad penny in all those millions."

"Well, it is rather staggering, isn't it?" said Montgomery, passing his hand over his forehead. He was beginning to comprehend.

"In more ways than one. What are you going to do about it?"

"Do about it?" in surprise. "Why, it's mine, isn't it?"

"It is not yours until next September," the lawyer quietly said.

"Well, I fancy I can wait," said Brewster, with a smile that cleared the air.

"But, my dear fellow, you are already the possessor of a million. Do you realize that you are expected to be penniless a year from now?"

"Wouldn't you exchange a million for seven millions, Mr. Grant?"

"But do you seriously imagine how you purpose doing it?" asked Mr. Grant mildly.

"Why, by the simple process of destruction. Don't you suppose I can get rid of a million in a year? Great Scott, who wouldn't do it! All I have to do is to cut a few purse strings, and there is but one natural conclusion. I don't mind being a pauper for a few hours on the 23d of next September."

"That is your plan, then?"

"Of course. First I shall substantiate all that this will sets forth. When I am assured that there can be no possibility of mistake in the extent of this fortune and my undisputed claim I'll take steps to get rid of my grandfather's million in short order." Brewster's voice rang true now. The zest of life was coming back.

Mr. Grant leaned forward slowly, and his intent, penetrating gaze served as a check to the young fellow's enthusiasm.

"I admire and approve the sagacity which urges you to exchange a paltry million for a fortune, but it seems to me that you are forgetting the conditions," he said slowly. "Has it occurred to you that it will be no easy task to spend a million dollars without in some way violating the restrictions in your uncle's will, thereby losing both fortunes?"

CHAPTER V.

A NEW point of view gradually came to Brewster. All his life had been spent in wondering where to get enough money to pay his bills, and it had not occurred to him that it might be as difficult to spend as to acquire wealth. The thought staggered him for a moment. Then he cried triumphantly, "I can decline to accept grandfather's million."

"You cannot decline to accept what is already yours. I understand that the money has been paid to you by Mr. Buskirk. You have a million dollars, Mr. Brewster, and cannot be denied."

"You are right," agreed Montgomery dejectedly. "Really, Mr. Grant, this proposition is too much for me. If you haven't received an immediate answer I want to think it over. It sounds like a dream."

"It is no dream, Mr. Brewster," smiled the lawyer. "You are face to face with an amazing reality. Come in tomorrow morning and see me again. Think it over, study the requirements per the conditions of the will and the conditions that confront you. In the meantime I shall write to Mr. Jones, the executor, and learn from him just what he expects you to do in order to carry out his own conception of the terms of your uncle's will."

"I call! Write, Mr. Grant," telegraph. And ask him to wire his reply. A year is not very long in an affair of this kind."

A moment later he added: "Hang these fellows! Why couldn't Uncle James have relented a bit? He brings endless trouble on my innocent head just because of a row before I was born."

"He was a strange man. As a rule, one does not carry grudges quite so far. But that is neither here nor there. His will is law in this case."

"Suppose I succeed in spending all but a thousand dollars before the 23d of next September! I'd lose the seven millions and be the next thing to a pauper. That wouldn't be quite like getting my money's worth."

"It is a problem, my boy. Think it over very seriously before you come to a decision one way or the other. In the meantime you can establish beyond a doubt the accuracy of this inventory."

"By all means go ahead, and please urge Mr. Jones not to be too hard on me. I believe I'll risk it if the restrictions are not too severe. But if Jones has puritanical instincts I might as well give up hope and be satisfied with what I have."

"Mr. Jones is very far from what you'd call puritanical, but he is intensely practical and clear headed. He will undoubtedly require you to keep an expense account and to show some sort of receipt for every dollar you disburse."

"Good Lord! Itemize?"

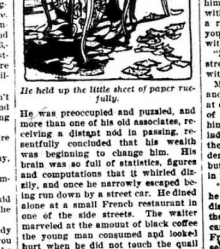
"In a general way, I presume."

"I'll have to employ an army of spendthrifts to devise ways and means for profligacy."

"You forget the item which restrains you from taking anybody into your confidence concerning this matter. Think it over. It may not be so difficult after a night's sleep."

"If it isn't too difficult to get the night's sleep."

All the rest of the day Brewster wandered about as one in a dream.



He held up the little sheet of paper rue

He was preoccupied and puzzled, and more than one of his old associates, receiving a distant nod in passing, resentfully concluded that his recent wealth was beginning to change him. His brain was so full of statistics, figures and computations that it whirled dizzily, and once he narrowly escaped being run down by a street car. He dined alone at a small French restaurant in one of the side streets. The waiter marveled at the amount of black coffee the young man consumed and looked hurt when he did not touch the quail and lettuce.

That night the little table in his room at Mrs. Gray's was littered with scraps of pad paper, each covered with an incomprehensible maze of figures. After dinner he had gone to his own rooms, forgetting that he lived on Fifth avenue. Until long after midnight he smoked and calculated and dreamed. For the first time the immensity of that million thrust itself upon him. If on that very day, Oct. 3, he were to begin the task of spending it he would have but 357 days in which to accomplish the end. Taking the round sum of $1,000,000 as a basis, it was an easy matter to calculate his average daily disbursement. The situation did not look so utterly impossible until he held up the little sheet of paper and definitely contemplated the result of that simple problem in mathematics.

It meant an average daily expenditure of $2,801.12 for exactly a year, and even then there would be 16 cents left over, for in providing the result of his rough sum in division he could not count for but $999,999.84. Then it occurred to him that his money would be drawing interest at the bank.

"But for each day's $2,801.12 I am getting seven cents as much," he soliloquized as he finally got into bed. "That means $19,607.84 a day, a clear profit of $16,806.72. That's pretty good —yes, too good. I wonder if the bank couldn't oblige me by not charging interest?"

The figures kept adding and subtracting themselves as he dozed off, and once during the night he dreamed that Swearengen Jones had compelled him to eat a million dollars' worth of game and salad at the French restaurant. He awoke with the consciousness that he had cried aloud, "I can do it, but a year is not very long in an affair of this kind."

It was 9 o'clock when Brewster finally rose, and after his bath he felt ready to cope with any problem, even a substantial breakfast. A message had come to him from Mr. Grant of Grant & Ripley, announcing the receipt of important dispatches from Montana and asking him to luncheon at 1. He had time to spare, and so Margaret and Mrs. Gray had gone out he telephoned Ellis to take his horse to the entrance to the park at once. The crisp autumn air was good for a ride, and Brewster found a number of smart people already riding and driving in the park. His horse was keen for a canter, and he had reached the obelisk before he drew rein. As he was about to cross the carriage road he was nearly run down by Miss Drew in her new French automobile.

"I beg your pardon," she cried. "You're the third person I've run into, so you see I'm not discriminating against you."

"I should be flattered even to be run down by you."

"Very well, then, look out." And she started the machine as if to charge him. She stopped in time and said, with a laugh: "Your gallantry deserves a reward. Wouldn't you rather send your horse home and come for a ride with me?"

"My man is waiting at Fifty-ninth street. If you'll come that far I'll go with pleasure."

Monty had merely a society acquaintance with Miss Drew. He had met her at dinners and dances as he had a host of other girls, but she had impressed him more than the others. Something indescribable took place every time their eyes met. Monty had often wondered just what that something meant, but he had always realized that it had in it nothing of platonic affection.

"If I didn't look to meet her eyes," he had said to himself, "I could go on discussing even politics with her, but the moment she looks at me I know she can see what I'm thinking about." From the first they considered themselves very good friends, and after their third meeting it seemed perfectly natural that they should call one another by their first names. Monty knew he was treading on dangerous ground. It never occurred to him to wonder what Barbara might think of him. He took it as a matter of course that she must feel more than friendly toward him. As they rode through the mass of carriages they bowed frequently to friends as they passed. They were conscious that some of the women, noticeably old Miss Dexter, actually turned around and gazed at them.

"Aren't you afraid people will talk about us?" asked Monty, with a laugh.

"Talk about our riding together in the park? It's just as safe here as it would be in Fifth avenue. Besides, who cares? I fancy I can stand it."

"You're a thoroughbred, Barbara. I simply didn't want you talked about. When I go too far, say the word and drop me."

"I have a luncheon at 2, but until then we have our ride."

Monty glanced and looked at his watch. "Five minutes to 1!" he cried. The matter of his engagement with the attorney had quite escaped him. In the exhilarating air of Miss Drew's companionship he had forgotten even Uncle James' millions.

"I've got a date at 1 that means life and death to me. Would you mind taking me down to the nearest elevated—or—here, let me run it."

Almost before Barbara was aware of what was happening they had changed places, and the machine, under Monty's guidance, was tearing over the ground.

"Of all the casual people!" said the girl, by no means unequal to the excitement. "I believe you're kidnaping me."

But when she saw the grim look on Monty's face and one policeman after another warned him she became seriously alarmed. "Monty Brewster, this pace is positively dangerous."

"Perhaps it is," he responded, "but if it is, I'm in no mood to keep out of the way they shouldn't kick if they get run over."

"I don't mean the people or the automobiles or traps or trees or monuments, Monty. I mean you and me. I know we'll either be killed or arrested."

"This isn't anything to the guilt I'll be going if everything turns out as I expect. Don't be worried, Babs. Besides, it's I now. Lord, I didn't dream it was late!"

"Is your appointment so important?" she asked, hanging on.

"Very. I should say it is, and—look out, you blooming idiot! Do you want to get killed?" The last remark was hurled back at an indignant policeman who had escaped destruction by the merest chance.

"Here we are," he said as they drew up beside the entrance to the elevated. "I'm awfully—you're a corker—sorry to leave you this way. I'll tell you all about it later. You're a dear to help me keep my appointment."

"Seems to me you helped yourself," she cried after him as he darted up the steps. "Come up for tea some day and tell me who the lady is."

After he had gone Miss Drew turned to her chauffeur, who was in the tonneau; then she laughed unrestrainedly, and the faintest shadow of a grin stole over the man's face.

"Beg pardon, miss," he said, "but I'd back Mr. Brewster against Fournier and Tart."

Only half an hour late, Brewster entered the office of Messrs. Grant & Ripley, flushed and excited and serious on the big splotch of mud that decorated his cheek.

"Awfully sorry to have kept you waiting," he apologized.

"Sherlock Holmes would say that you had been driving, Mr. Brewster," said Mr. Ripley, shaking the young man's hand.

"He would miss it, Mr. Ripley. I've been flying. What have you heard from Montana?" He could no longer check the impatient question, which came out so suddenly that the attorneys laughed irresistibly. Brewster joining them an instant later. They laid before him a half dozen telegrams, responses from bankers, lawyers and mine operators in Montana. These messages established beyond doubt the extent of Jagger T. Sedgwick's wealth. It was reported to be even greater than shown by the actual figures.

"And what does Mr. Jones say?" demanded Montgomery.

"His reply resembles a press dispatch. He has tried to make himself thoroughly clear, and if there is anything left unsaid it is past our comprehension. I am sorry to inform you, though, that he has paid the telegraph charges," said Mr. Grant, smiling broadly.

"Is he rational about it?" asked Montgomery nervously.

Mr. Grant gave his partner a quick, significant glance and then drew from his desk the voluminous telegram from Swearengen Jones. It was as follows:

Grant & Ripley, Yucatan Building, New York:

You're the third person I've run into, so you see I'm not discriminating against you."

"I should be flattered even to be run down by you."

"Very well, then, look out." And she started the machine as if to charge him. She stopped in time and said, with a laugh: "Your gallantry deserves a reward. Wouldn't you rather send your horse home and come for a ride with me?"

Gaspe, Que., Nov. 6th—After working on the Branch for poisoning case for some days, High Constable Crowther arrested Wm. Burrowes, of Eden Mills, and brought him into the city this afternoon. Prior to the polo ing match in Erasmus Township Paris green was placed in the feed mixer of a couple of horses belonging to Mr. Dwyer, of Dorcas, with fatal effect. The constable charges Burrows, who was a hired man at Dorcas, with the act of poisoning, and states that the prisoner has confessed. The accused is said to have hired the Paris green since June, and to have nourished some grudge against Mr. Dickinson and Mr. Grassley, who was to drive the team in the contest.

An unknown but surely large number pay themselves the toll somewhat unconsciously. Yet nowhere is the most careful people of this country there are no records which indicate such conditions. The weight of evidence clearly acquits the grape seed.

It was given out by railway circles that the Grand Trunk had assumed control of the Central Ontario railway. The line is 80 miles long, and runs from Picton to Bancroft.

A NARROW ESCAPE.

Deseronto Tribune.

J. H. Wannacott had an experience on Wednesday evening that he does not care to repeat. At sundown each evening he rows out to the mouth of the river to light the lamp that hangs in the rigging as a warning to passing vessels. Shortly after 5 o'clock Wednesday afternoon he rowed out to the wreck, and just as he was trying up his skiff a squall broke over him, upsetting the skiff. He clambered up on the wreck, and began waving the lantern to attract attention to his predicament. The light was extinguished before he succeeded. Then he tried shouting, but the wind was too high for his voice to carry any distance, and it was getting darker all the time. Finally the steamer Ella Ross passed to leeward and he shouted for all he was worth. Capt. Christie took the steamer back to the wharf and sent out the tug Ranger to pick Wannacott off. He had been in the rigging about an hour and a half, and as the weather was cold and a high wind blowing he was nearly chilled through. As it happened, however, no ill results followed the exposure.

WIRE EDGE READY ROOFING

THE SACRIFICE OF SELF

ONE OF THE CHIEF ESSENTIALS OF A NOBLE CHARACTER.

GREAT RULE OF TRUE LIFE

The Need Sensed the Service Required Be Made Promptly and Cheerfully—Rights of Others Clearly Set Forth —A Talmage Sermon That Is of the Most Timely Order and Points Way to Mutual Concessions.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1905, by Frederick Dixey, of Toronto, in the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Nov. 5.—In this sermon the virtue of self sacrifice and generous recognition of the rights of others is clearly set forth and is shown to be one of the chief essentials of a noble character. The text is Matthew v., 41, "Whosoever shall compel thee to go with him one mile, go with him twain."

What Sir Walter Scott was to the moors and glens of old Scotland, romantic with their legends and folklore, and what Charles Dickens was to the quaint vernacular of the London streets, and what Fenimore Cooper was to the North American Indian, with his wigwam and his campfires, his haires and his lore, Frederic Remington, the great American figure and animal painter, has been to the habits and customs, the comedies and tragedies of the western cowboy, now almost a relic of the past. Future students of our past history reading Theodore Roosevelt's "Winning of the West" will gain a clearer idea of the scenes and the people there described if those four volumes are illustrated with Remington's famous pictures, "The Last Stand," "The Crooked Trail," "The Frontier Sketches" and "A Dash For the Timber." But above all the pictures that Frederic Remington has sketched I do not believe there are any more powerful than those in which he depicts the daring exploits of the messengers of the pony expresses. Now the east and the west have been married by the wedding ring of the iron rail and the swift locomotive dashes across the continent, but in former times the gold fields of California were almost cut off from communication with the busy east if it had not been for the useful system of the pony express.

Every thirty or forty miles there was a station, a lonely chain of stations stretched clear across the continent. Then between these stations every day a cowboy would ride. Alone upon a horse he rode forth with the mail and with his saddlebags often loaded down with gold and precious stones. He rode straight out into the deserts and over the prairies; he rode forth in defiance of Indian murderers and of white, skinned highwaymen and ferocious wild beast; he rode with his life depending upon the speed and soundness of his alm and the steadiness of his gun as upon the swiftness of the sure-footed beast he bestrode. There is some of Frederic Remington's "Frontier Sketches" you can hear the messenger of the "pony express" riding with a score of red-skinned savages on his trail. You can almost hear the heavings of his exhausted horse and the whizzing of the rifle balls as they fly past the cowboy's ears. There is a digging in the spurs in his race with death, or, rather, in his race for life. Now, in order to get a clear grasp of my text we should take some of Remington's "Frontier Sketches" as reference to the pony express and give them an orietnal coloring and put them among the Palestine hills of 1,000—aye, of over 2,000—years ago.

Albert Barnes tells us that the word "compel" of my text is of Persian origin. It comes from the royal court of Cyrus the Great who died in 529 B. C. There was no postal system in those day. King Cyrus planned a system of pony expresses all over his empire. Thus by a score of relays of horses, when the king wished to send a royal command to one of the governors of his provinces, his messages could be handed from courier to courier with the greatest expedition. As those couriers had to go through wild regions, like those traveled by the messengers of the pony express during the fifties and the sixties, they had a right to compel any man they met to go with them and protect them as the county sheriff to-day has a right to compel you or me to help him arrest an offender against the law.

This extensive system of pony expresses not only spread throughout Persia, but in Christ's time spread through all the Roman Empire and Caesar's provinces. Christ took this matter to show how his disciples should be willing to sacrifice for any right authority, such as I have simply and common illustration. He says, "If any courier shall compel thee to go with him one mile, go with him a twain." That means when an authority asks you to do a certain amount of work you should be willing to do twice what he asks. Can we not to-day make this application of sublime gospel concession to the home and to our relations with employers, our churches and the great world at large as well as to Caesar's couriers?

Christ's command of cheerful submission applies to the home. As in the government, the executive, legislative and judicial departments all have their place and their separate functions, so in the home there are co-ordinate powers, each with its duties and its rights. The husband and wife, the parents and children, all come under this divine injunction of mutual concessions and of cheerful obedience. This would promote domestic happiness. If any one in the home has need of a service it should be promptly and fully rendered—aye, in double the measure required.

It is unwillingness to go the twain mile in the home which causes most of the difficulties of the domestic circle. You know it by personal experience. You hear angry words coming from the children's bedroom. "What is the matter, girls?" I hear you ask. "Why this trouble?" "Oh," answers your daughter Mary, "I cannot stand Jennie's disorder any longer! She was playing with her dolls yesterday, and she left her doll trunk right in the middle of the floor. I have stumbled over it again and again. Now I have fallen and hurt my knee. Then, besides, I can't look at that bed. It is a perfect sight. It is her time to make it up to-day. I made it yesterday." "What is the matter, Jennie?" I say. "Daughter, why did you not put the trunk away and make up the bed like Mary did?" With that Jennie angrily tosses her head as she answers: "I simply will not do Jennie's work. I am ready to do my own work, but I am not willing to do hers." Why are the girls quarreling? They are both standing upon their rights. They are not forbearing to each other. They are not willing to carry each other's burdens. They are not willing to go the twain mile. They are willing to do what they have to do, but they are not ready to do what they do not have to do for each other.

What is true about the difficulties between the children of a home is also true in reference to most of the difficulties between husband and wife. Instead of some men and women looking upon the marriage altar as an opportunity for mutual service they are partners of their marital partners, they look upon it as a stepping stone to the higher plane on which they make their husbands or wives work for them. Their marriage altar is not a consecrated and beautiful nuptial ceremony which the Cherokee Indians used to have. There the bridegroom and the bride would stand upon the opposite banks of a brook and clasp hands over the running water to show that they forgot their interests and work were to flow together as the waters of a running stream. But instead of each husband being willing to go the twain mile for the wife, or some wives being willing to go the twain mile for the husband, each says, "I will do for you what I am compelled to do, and I will not do anything else."

A young man wooes, wins and marries a young girl She has been brought up in a well-to-do father's home. She was an only daughter, and to a great extent she has been petted. The time passes on. The young husband tries to keep up a home to the standard in which his wife has been accustomed to live, but the income is too small to meet the outgo. Day after day he keeps saying: "Nellie, you must economize. You must lessen our expenses. Cannot you make your old hat do this season? Cannot you send your children to the public school?" "No," she answers, "I shall not. You married me, and it is your place to take care of me. I never heard this nagging question of money, money, money, in my father's home, and I ought not to hear it now." The young man staggers on in his struggle. He takes to drink. Kind words are now exchanged for angry ones. The domestic difficulties culminate in the divorce court. Why? The one was unwilling to go the twain mile for her husband's love. On the other hand the husband is just as much to blame as the wife. From sickness or overwork the wife may become a nervous wreck. In her weakness is he always gentle? Is he always kind? Is he always thoughtful? Does he try to make her life as he ought? Do the two angels Bear and Forbear hover over his fireside? Are we all, for our dear sakes, ready to travel the twain mile of sacrifice?

Are we ready to do for our dear ones what I saw a noble friend of mine do for his helpless, tongue-tied and mentally beclouded wife, a few months ago went to her heavenly rest. This gentleman at the time I knew him had passed his threescore years and ten His wife had a fatal disease creeping over her that was making her more helpless every day. Instead of the old gentleman leaving her at home to be cared for by servants he went out to hear one of the greatest singers in the world he took her apparently against her physical and mental weakness she always loved music. Then he would say to me: "Ah, if you only knew how when she was well! I can never be too good to her for what she has been to me." Ah, how I wish we should never forget what our dear ones have done for us. They have traveled the twain mile more than once for us. Shall we not travel the twain mile for them?

One day a young artist called upon Audubon, the great naturalist, and showed some drawings to him. Audubon looked at these drawings for a moment. Then he said: "I like those drawings very much, but they are not true. You have painted the legs of this partridge nicely, except in one respect. The scales are correct in number and order, but you have not arranged them correctly as to numbers. Now, upon this upper ridge of the partridge's leg there are just so many scales. You have painted too many. Examine the legs of a thousand partridges, and you will find the scales always the same in number." Then Audubon said: "Young man, it is only when you become wedded to your work—body, mind and soul—that you will make a success out of it. You must be willing to work day in and day out, week in and week out, year in and year out, to investigate to the minutest detail; otherwise you can never make it." When you work for science you must work entirely above the lure of mercenary remuneration. You must work for love."

What is true in reference to science and professional life is equally true in business. The young man who makes a success in business is the one who forgets employer's interests his own. It is not the young man who simply does what he is told to who is promoted in the office. It is not the young man who works with his eyes upon the clock, ready to drop his tools at the first stroke of the bell, who becomes the foreman of the factory. It is the young man who is a perfect glutton for work who, finally sits in the glass office. It is the young man who is willing to do what he is not asked to do, and what other clerks are unwilling to do, who finally gets the promotion. In other words, the successful man in the mercantile world is the successful man in the scientific or the professional world, the man who for others is ready to travel the twain mile.

Oh, the neglected opportunities of business, to which some of us shut our eyes! These neglected opportunities are lying about, despised, everywhere around us. The story is told that one day a couple of humorists were wandering through the zoological gardens of London. While there they saw the carcass of a huge lion being dragged from its cage. In a spirit of fun they bought it and sent the dead lion as a joke to their friend, Sir Edwin Landseer. It arrived at the great artist's house early one morning. The servant, in amazement, went and awoke his master to ask him what he should do with it. Landseer at once dressed and went down to see it. He stood a moment and looked at the huge body. Then he said, "Bring it into my study." They carried it in. Then Landseer took up his brush and commenced to paint. He painted that dead lion in the midst of a great expanse of sand! He called the picture "The Desert." It became his most famous masterpiece.

The model which his friends tossed aside as a joke he took and made out of it a stepping stone to a throne. Is not this sentimental as well as in mercantile life there are opportunities lying about us everywhere. If we are unwilling to do the love of work; if we sacrifice for them, even though at the time they may seem to amount to naught, our "dead hone" will become "living lions." When a man works for love, then a man, like Sir Edwin Landseer, will make everything he touches redound to his own success. "If in the mercantile world they compel you to compel thee to go with him one mile, go with him twain."

But there is another authority that has a right to subpoena your time and your sacrifice, just as Caesar's courier had a right to compel the Hebrew to protect him when he was carrying the royal message over the Judaean hills. This authority is the church. It has a right to come to you in the home, in the store—anywhere you may be—and demand: "God wants your money. God wants your time. God wants your personal sacrifices. Come with me for at least one mile." Now Christ says: "In the name of the church you should be willing to go one mile for God's church; you should be willing to go the twain mile." Yet how few people are willing to give up their money and time and personal sacrifices for the church of God as they ought!

Do you want to have time for almost every other line of work on earth, but that of the church. I go to you to-day and say: "Mrs. So-and-so, I do wish you would come and work in our Sunday school. I have one of the finest classes of girls you ever saw. There are almost twenty girls in it. They are just at the critical age of fifteen. You can only hold them for five or six years longer they will make grand workers for God. But they must have the right kind of a teacher. Will you come?" And inevitably I hear an answer something like this: "Oh, I can't come. That means I will have to get up early Sunday morning and always be there. I had better ask some one else who can be more faithful and better fitted for that work than I." And so I am put off from getting the right kind of teachers for my Sunday school, just as nearly all pastors and Sunday school superintendents are put off. The average church members are willing to go the first mile for God in the church.

The chief purpose for which the church was started was the saving of souls. Could any work be more important? Some years ago I saw an officer of the law pursuing a thief. A policeman tried to stop him. For a moment's hesitation the officer commanded the driver to halt. He kept after the thief. You say at once: "That is right. The officer had a perfect right to do that." Yes, my friends, then I would ask you this question, If that officer had a right to take a man and his carriage and horses, fleeing thief, had not my Lord and my God a right to summon you to come and work in his church, where Christian people are working and praying in order to develop boys and girls and men and women so that they will not become thieves and social outcasts. Is the service in the Christian field a burdening building, any more important than that of a Sir Humphry Davy, who manufactures the little mining lamp, that there may not be a fatal explosion in the mine?

But I cannot close without speaking one or two words with direct reference to to-day's duty. Christ in the text enunciating the doctrine he preached to the Pharisees when he said, "Render unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's as well as to God the things which are God's." Shall we not, in this best and in the truest sense, be sublimely submissive to our city and state and national government? And yet, when our country is calling us, and needs our aid, how many of us turn deaf ears to those calls! For the peace and happiness of our dear native land are we ready to fight its internal enemies as well as its foreign foes? Are we ready to fight the saloon and all its sinful dives and all the evil influences that are trying to suck out the lifeblood of our social organism? Are we willing to be true to the nation and come to the help as the Hebrews should have been willing to spring to the aid of Caesar's couriers or go with them not one mile, but twain?

Thus my text has not, as some people might suppose, a literal but a figurative interpretation. It does not simply mean that you should be willing to travel with a man 2,000 paces, which was double the distance of the ordinary mile, but it means that in the home, the store, the church and as an American citizen you should render unto God the things which are God's can. You should sacrifice for, his name, no matter how great the sacrifices may seem to be. It is said that after one of the famous Spartan battles a Lacedaemonian mother hailed the courier who brought the news from the front. This mother had five sons fighting in the army. "How goes the battle?" she called she. "Alas," said the courier, "all thy boys are slain!" The brave mother answered: "I did not ask thee how fared my boys, but how fares my country. If the battle is won, all is well, no matter what has happened to my sons." So may it be with us. May we not work to find out how it shall be with us, but how it shall be with others. May we work and continue to work not for our individual selves, but for the best interests of all around them in the store, the church, the country. Then we shall be working for God and humanity. Oh, my brother women, will you travel for others to-day the twain mile?

DYING BY INCHES.

Bloodless Girls Saved by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Dying by inches—that is the only way to describe hundreds of bloodless girls who are slowly but surely losing their simple anaemia into a decline. They drag themselves along with no hope in the grave things, the years of youth that should be the happiest in their lives. And the reason is that they have no blood. Their blood is the fountain head of all the trouble that afflicts them, from simple lurdity to middle life. Bad blood causes all the palenesses, breathlessness and despondency of anaemia. Bad blood causes all the nervousness, headaches and dizzy turns and deathly fainting spells. Bad blood causes the heart to palpitate on any a step. In nine cases out of ten consumption is only bad blood aggravated and the only sure cure for consumption is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, which actually make new, rich, red blood, and by this means drive every trace of ill health to sallow cheeks and strength to the weak limbs. Mrs. Soand-so, I do not mean to prove testimonials of cases, but I will tell you what Pink Pills have done for Miss Blank. For years she was a complete wreck from anaemia. Doctors said that I had no blood—that I had not enough blood to nourish the heart. I was unfit to do anything for months, and was little more than a mere bag of bones. I had no appetite; the least exertion would leave me breathless and I suffered with severe headaches. I was treated by several doctors, but got no help from any of them, and I was completely discouraged. Then I was induced to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and in a few weeks after I began using them I gained twenty-two pounds in weight, and was a healthy girl once more. That Dr. Williams' Pink Pills did for Miss Peach they can and will do for other weak and ailing girl. They make new blood and bring health and strength and happiness. But you must be sure you have the genuine pills with the full name "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People," printed on the wrapper around each box. All dealers sell them, or you can get them by mail at 50 cents a box or $2 boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

FASHIONS IN PARIS.

"One of the characteristic elements of this Winter's fashions," wrote a Parisian modiste in the New York Herald Tribune, "will be found in the elegant cloaks. Both the Empire and carriage styles hold their own, but the first mentioned even surpassing the latter in popularity.

Lace and fur are the prevailing trimmings, and these materials are seen in all sorts of combinations. Indeed, the combination of fur has been undertaken with an independence that would have shocked the old masters of the art.

For dressy and evening wear, velvet and satin seem to be the most favored materials, although soft, pliable cloths hold their own for the afternoon gown.

The semi-short sleeve is seen at all the fashionable establishments; that is the portion from the elbow down is made minuscule in size, a fashion of fact that requires material to give the effect of short sleeves. All fear it will be thought that this would not be sufficiently warm, but the huge pillow muff that has come into fashion has done away with all such fears. Russian sable, ermine, chinchilla and the Persian lamb seem to be the furs most valued for this season.

High crowned hats with flowing plumes are having their vogue, naturally, with the Empire styles. Some of these are extremely picturesque, turned up at one side, with the plumes flowing to the back of the shoulder. Combinations of velvet, felt, lace and fur are used in their construction.

SALT MONEY.

"When we say a man is not worth his salt," said a philosopher, "we use an incorrect and slightly comic form of speech. We go all the way back in fact, to the time of the ancient Romans.

The Roman workers in the salt mines were paid in salt. The salt that they got, in return for their labor was called the salarium (sal-salt), or salt allowance.

The word salarium, meaning salt money, or allowance for salt, later was applied to any form of pay for old jobs. 'I will give that fellow a slight increase in salt,' the master of the house would say, 'for he is not worth paying wages to.'

THE SACRIFICE OF SELF

ONE OF THE CHIEF ESSENTIALS OF A NOBLE CHARACTER.

GREAT RULE OF TRUE LIFE

The Need Sensed the Service Required Be Made Promptly and Cheerfully—Rights of Others Clearly Set Forth —A Talmage Sermon That Is of the Most Timely Order and Points Way to Mutual Concessions.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1905, by Frederick Dixey, of Toronto, in the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Nov. 5.—In this sermon the virtue of self sacrifice and generous recognition of the rights of others is clearly set forth and is shown to be one of the chief essentials of a noble character. The text is Matthew v., 41, "Whosoever shall compel thee to go with him one mile, go with him twain."

What Sir Walter Scott was to the moors and glens of old Scotland, romantic with their legends and folklore, and what Charles Dickens was to the quaint vernacular of the London streets, and what Fenimore Cooper was to the North American Indian, with his wigwam and his campfires, his haires and his lore, Frederic Remington, the great American figure and animal painter, has been to the habits and customs, the comedies and tragedies of the western cowboy, now almost a relic of the past. Future students of our past history reading Theodore Roosevelt's "Winning of the West" will gain a clearer idea of the scenes and the people there described if those four volumes are illustrated with Remington's famous pictures, "The Last Stand," "The Crooked Trail," "The Frontier Sketches" and "A Dash For the Timber." But above all the pictures that Frederic Remington has sketched I do not believe there are any more powerful than those in which he depicts the daring exploits of the messengers of the pony expresses. Now the east and the west have been married by the wedding ring of the iron rail and the swift locomotive dashes across the continent, but in former times the gold fields of California were almost cut off from communication with the busy east if it had not been for the useful system of the pony express.

Every thirty or forty miles there was a station, a lonely chain of stations stretched clear across the continent Then between these stations every day a cowboy would ride. Alone upon a horse he rode forth with the mail and with his saddlebags often loaded down with gold and precious stones. He rode straight out into the deserts and over the prairies; he rode forth in defiance of Indian murderers and of white, skinned highwaymen and ferocious wild beast; he rode with his life depending upon the speed and soundness of his alm and the steadiness of his gun as upon the swiftness of the sure-footed beast he bestrode. There is some of Frederic Remington's "Frontier Sketches" you can hear the messenger of the "pony express" riding with a score of red-skinned savages on his trail. You can almost hear the heavings of his exhausted horse and the whizzing of the rifle balls as they fly past the cowboy's ears. There is a digging in the spurs in his race with death, or, rather, in his race for life. Now, in order to get a clear grasp of my text we should take some of Remington's "Frontier Sketches" as reference to the pony express and give them an orietnal coloring and put them among the Palestine hills of 1,000—aye, of over 2,000—years ago.

Albert Barnes tells us that the word "compel" of my text is of Persian origin. It comes from the royal court of Cyrus the Great who died in 529 B. C. There was no postal system in those day. King Cyrus planned a system of pony expresses all over his empire. Thus by a score of relays of horses, when the king wished to send a royal command to one of the governors of his provinces, his messages could be handed from courier to courier with the greatest expedition. As those couriers had to go through wild regions, like those traveled by the messengers of the pony express during the fifties and the sixties, they had a right to compel any man they met to go with them and protect them as the county sheriff to-day has a right to compel you or me to help him arrest an offender against the law.

This extensive system of pony expresses not only spread throughout Persia, but in Christ's time spread through all the Roman Empire and Caesar's provinces. Christ took this matter to show how his disciples should be willing to sacrifice for any right authority, such as I have simply and common illustration. He says, "If any courier shall compel thee to go with him one mile, go with him a twain." That means when an authority asks you to do a certain amount of work you should be willing to do twice what he asks. Can we not to-day make this application of sublime gospel concession to the home and to our relations with employers, our churches and the great world at large as well as to Caesar's couriers?

Christ's command of cheerful submission applies to the home. As in the government, the executive, legislative and judicial departments all have their place and their separate functions, so in the home there are co-ordinate powers, each with its duties and its rights. The husband and wife, the parents and children, all come under this divine injunction of mutual concessions and of cheerful obedience. This would promote domestic happiness. If any one in the home has need of a service it should be promptly and fully rendered—aye, in double the measure required.

It is unwillingness to go the twain mile in the home which causes most of the difficulties of the domestic circle. You know it by personal experience. You hear angry words coming from the children's bedroom. "What is the matter, girls?" I hear you ask. "Why this trouble?" "Oh," answers your daughter Mary, "I cannot stand Jennie's disorder any longer! She was playing with her dolls yesterday, and she left her doll trunk right in the middle of the floor. I have stumbled over it again and again. Now I have fallen and hurt my knee. Then, besides, I can't look at that bed. It is a perfect sight. It is her time to make it up to-day. I made it yesterday." "What is the matter, Jennie?" I say. "Daughter, why did you not put the trunk away and make up the bed like Mary did?" With that Jennie angrily tosses her head as she answers: "I simply will not do Jennie's work. I am ready to do my own work, but I am not willing to do hers." Why are the girls quarreling? They are both standing upon their rights. They are not forbearing to each other. They are not willing to carry each other's burdens. They are not willing to go the twain mile. They are willing to do what they have to do, but they are not ready to do what they do not have to do for each other.

What is true about the difficulties between the children of a home is also true in reference to most of the difficulties between husband and wife. Instead of some men and women looking upon the marriage altar as an opportunity for mutual service they are partners of their marital partners, they look upon it as a stepping stone to the higher plane on which they make their husbands or wives work for them. Their marriage altar is not a consecrated and beautiful nuptial ceremony which the Cherokee Indians used to have. There the bridegroom and the bride would stand upon the opposite banks of a brook and clasp hands over the running water to show that they forgot their interests and work were to flow together as the waters of a running stream. But instead of each husband being willing to go the twain mile for the wife, or some wives being willing to go the twain mile for the husband, each says, "I will do for you what I am compelled to do, and I will not do anything else."

A young man wooes, wins and marries a young girl She has been brought up in a well-to-do father's home. She was an only daughter, and to a great extent she has been petted. The time passes on. The young husband tries to keep up a home to the standard in which his wife has been accustomed to live, but the income is too small to meet the outgo. Day after day he keeps saying: "Nellie, you must economize. You must lessen our expenses. Cannot you make your old hat do this season? Cannot you send your children to the public school?" "No," she answers, "I shall not. You married me, and it is your place to take care of me. I never heard this nagging question of money, money, money, in my father's home, and I ought not to hear it now." The young man staggers on in his struggle. He takes to drink. Kind words are now exchanged for angry ones. The domestic difficulties culminate in the divorce court. Why? The one was unwilling to go the twain mile for her husband's love. On the other hand the husband is just as much to blame as the wife. From sickness or overwork the wife may become a nervous wreck. In her weakness is he always gentle? Is he always kind? Is he always thoughtful? Does he try to make her life as he ought? Do the two angels Bear and Forbear hover over his fireside? Are we all, for our dear sakes, ready to travel the twain mile of sacrifice?

Are we ready to do for our dear ones what I saw a noble friend of mine do for his helpless, tongue-tied and mentally beclouded wife, a few months ago went to her heavenly rest. This gentleman at the time I knew him had passed his threescore years and ten His wife had a fatal disease creeping over her that was making her more helpless every day. Instead of the old gentleman leaving her at home to be cared for by servants he went out to hear one of the greatest singers in the world he took her apparently against her physical and mental weakness she always loved music. Then he would say to me: "Ah, if you only knew how when she was well! I can never be too good to her for what she has been to me." Ah, how I wish we should never forget what our dear ones have done for us. They have traveled the twain mile more than once for us. Shall we not travel the twain mile for them?

One day a young artist called upon Audubon, the great naturalist, and showed some drawings to him. Audubon looked at these drawings for a moment. Then he said: "I like those drawings very much, but they are not true. You have painted the legs of this partridge nicely, except in one respect. The scales are correct in number and order, but you have not arranged them correctly as to numbers. Now, upon this upper ridge of the partridge's leg there are just so many scales. You have painted too many. Examine the legs of a thousand partridges, and you will find the scales always the same in number." Then Audubon said: "Young man, it is only when you become wedded to your work—body, mind and soul—that you will make a success out of it. You must be willing to work day in and day out, week in and week out, year in and year out, to investigate to the minutest detail; otherwise you can never make it." When you work for science you must work entirely above the lure of mercenary remuneration. You must work for love."

What is true in reference to science and professional life is equally true in business. The young man who makes a success in business is the one who forgets employer's interests his own. It is not the young man who simply does what he is told to who is promoted in the office. It is not the young man who works with his eyes upon the clock, ready to drop his tools at the first stroke of the bell, who becomes the foreman of the factory. It is the young man who is a perfect glutton for work who, finally sits in the glass office. It is the young man who is willing to do what he is not asked to do, and what other clerks are unwilling to do, who finally gets the promotion. In other words, the successful man in the mercantile world is the successful man in the scientific or the professional world, the man who for others is ready to travel the twain mile.

Oh, the neglected opportunities of business, to which some of us shut our eyes! These neglected opportunities are lying about, despised, everywhere around us. The story is told that one day a couple of humorists were wandering through the zoological gardens of London. While there they saw the carcass of a huge lion being dragged from its cage. In a spirit of fun they bought it and sent the dead lion as a joke to their friend, Sir Edwin Landseer. It arrived at the great artist's house early one morning. The servant, in amazement, went and awoke his master to ask him what he should do with it. Landseer at once dressed and went down to see it. He stood a moment and looked at the huge body. Then he said, "Bring it into my study." They carried it in. Then Landseer took up his brush and commenced to paint. He painted that dead lion in the midst of a great expanse of sand! He called the picture "The Desert." It became his most famous masterpiece.

The model which his friends tossed aside as a joke he took and made out of it a stepping stone to a throne. Is not this sentimental as well as in mercantile life there are opportunities lying about us everywhere. If we are unwilling to do the love of work; if we sacrifice for them, even though at the time they may seem to amount to naught, our "dead hone" will become "living lions." When a man works for love, then a man, like Sir Edwin Landseer, will make everything he touches redound to his own success. "If in the mercantile world they compel you to compel thee to go with him one mile, go with him twain."

But there is another authority that has a right to subpoena your time and your sacrifice, just as Caesar's courier had a right to compel the Hebrew to protect him when he was carrying the royal message over the Judaean hills. This authority is the church. It has a right to come to you in the home, in the store—anywhere you may be—and demand: "God wants your money. God wants your time. God wants your personal sacrifices. Come with me for at least one mile." Now Christ says: "In the name of the church you should be willing to go one mile for God's church; you should be willing to go the twain mile." Yet how few people are willing to give up their money and time and personal sacrifices for the church of God as they ought!

Do you want to have time for almost every other line of work on earth, but that of the church. I go to you to-day and say: "Mrs. So-and-so, I do wish you would come and work in our Sunday school. I have one of the finest classes of girls you ever saw. There are almost twenty girls in it. They are just at the critical age of fifteen. You can only hold them for five or six years longer they will make grand workers for God. But they must have the right kind of a teacher. Will you come?" And inevitably I hear an answer something like this: "Oh, I can't come. That means I will have to get up early Sunday morning and always be there. I had better ask some one else who can be more faithful and better fitted for that work than I." And so I am put off from getting the right kind of teachers for my Sunday school, just as nearly all pastors and Sunday school superintendents are put off. The average church members are willing to go the first mile for God in the church.

The chief purpose for which the church was started was the saving of souls. Could any work be more important? Some years ago I saw an officer of the law pursuing a thief. A policeman tried to stop him. For a moment's hesitation the officer commanded the driver to halt. He kept after the thief. You say at once: "That is right. The officer had a perfect right to do that." Yes, my friends, then I would ask you this question,

M. C. BOGART, Napanee.

The story of the Texas farmer who, when asked by the minister performing the wedding ceremony, "Do you take this woman," etc., replied, "Thimble, thimble," reminds me of a similar occurrence in one of the Eastern counties of England. The Norfolk lingerman had married the same part of the service, and when the clergyman replied, "With all my worldly goods I thee endow," he responded, "Ah, I reckon 'ere 'n-puppus."

He—There's one thing I will say for you, you make waste as was your mother used to make it.

She—What is that, Fred?

He—Trouble.

Mrs. Henpeck—Really, you're enough to make a saint weary, Harvey! I'm sure Hezekiah Dobbs, Harvey! I often called you a saint!

Binks—When I first met you, sir, I thought you were a gentleman.

Spinks—And when I met you, sir, I was sure you were an idiot.

Binks—Well, let's shake hands and make up. Irritable men never like to admit that we were both mistaken.

An old farmer said to his son, "Boy, don't you ever get married. Don't you do it." "You might just as well go on and tell me not to exhale in the shade or sit under an apple tree. Dad, I'm made of a soft enough stuff to go to work and marry the first girl that will have me, so I'm not going to be milked."

An old fellow was asked the difference between a Methodist and a Presbyterian. "Well," he replied, after some deliberation, "a Methodist knows he's got religion, but is afraid he'll lose it; and the Presbyterian knows he can't lose it, but is scared to death for fear he hasn't got it."

The farmer mows his crop.
And the wife eats up his clothes;
The farmer darns the weather,
And his gown the darns his hose.
The farmer pitches in the hay,
But, should he pitch in her,
His good wife lays aside her work
And pitches into him.

Mother—I left to come on this errand, didn't I, Tommy?
Tommy—Why—er—yeah: I guess so. I s'pose you thought I was a wife and four children to support.
Mother—Indeed? Where did you see this poor lame man?
Tommy—Why, he was out in the street sellin' popcorn an' candy.

"YANKEE CONSUL" IN KINGSTON.

An engagement notable in the current theatrical season is that announced for the Grand in Kingston, on Tuesday, Nov. 14th, when the opera farce, "The Yankee Consul" will appear, together with the original supporting company, chorus, augmented orchestra and production. Indications for a most successful engagement are more than bright at this time and "The Consul" may expect to enjoy a portion of the success he enjoyed during his engagement last season of five months at the Broadway Theatre, New York, and other extended engagements in Boston, Chicago and Philadelphia. "The Yankee Consul" is one of the best equipped vehicles ever sent on tour, and the critics on the New York dailies have said that the opera was the best comic developed in almost a decade.

TONIC EFFECT OF LAUGHTER.

We are not disposed to say anything about the physiology of laughter, but we are prepared to affirm that as a tonic there is nothing within the capabilities of human experience that can match a good, healthy laugh. Whether something democratic about a laugh that makes it impossible to distinguish whether it be a prince or a pauper who is moved to merriment, hardly greater tragedy could be portrayed than to wrest the power of good from the Risus, but what could be a small calamity compared with the filching of laughter from life. If the conditions of the world could be such as to afford to every human being the truest enjoyment of a pure, hearty gale of laughter there would be no need that other favors be conferred, this alone would be ample testimony that happiness was paramount in the lives of men.

Much sympathy is expressed for Mr. and Mrs. W. Marchen, Calgary in the loss of their little daughter Eva, Sunday Oct. 29th, after a two days illness from pneumonia. The mother and babe had spent the past six months here at R. Marchens' thinking the change would prove beneficial to both, and had been expecting her husband daily to take them back to their home in the west. What was looked forward to as a happy reunion, was sad in the extreme meaning by more so as but two years had elapsed since death claimed their first little one, a strange coincidence, that this little one was the same age as the other, 10 months. The funeral took place Sunday last on the arrival of the father. A most impressive and comforting sermon was preached by Rev. Mr. McCamus, who took for his subject "David mourning for his child." Many were heard remark they never beheld a fairer little creature as it lay in its little white casket. Our Heavenly Father saw best to take it on a heavenly journey.

The Department of Inland Revenue is taking active steps towards suppressing the sale of adulterated foods in Dominion. The Government Analyst, throughout the past month reports numerous cases in the form of demand for fines for selling adulterated goods, notably pepper, cream of tartar, and jams. The fines have ranged from $20 to $24, and in exceptional cases were promptly paid to the officers who made the inspection. The remainder, however, will seek redress from the wholesale men, who will undoubtedly have to make good the several amounts of the fines.

FAMOUS PEOPLE

BY FANNIE M. LOTHROP

BLISS CARMAN

Canadian Poet, Critic and Editor

Bliss Carman, poet, critic and editor, one of the foremost of Canada's contemporary litérateurs, was born in Fredericton, N. B., in 1861, and on his father's side is descended from the Carmans who went from Long Island, N. Y., to New Brunswick, while his maternal ancestors fought in the American Revolution. He was educated at the college school of his native town and the University of New Brunswick, from which he graduated in 1881, later taking a two years' post-graduate course at the University of Edinburgh, and afterwards spending two years at Harvard.

There seemed to be a restless, Bohemian strain in this nature that chafed under restraint and convention; for he tried many lines apart from literature, but it had somehow a compelling homing instinct that always brought him back to a bottle of ink and a pen. For a few years he was law, then ventured into the field of civil engineering, then taught school—but it all proved empty and unsatisfying; he had not found his place.

It was not until his post-graduate days that his poetic sense became manifest and under the stimulus of the inspiring appreciation of the editors of the college literary magazine he began to write verses in a timid, furtive sort of a way. At first, he grew bolder and more trustful and the editor's drawer was stacked with enough Carman verses to last for years. When he began to send his poems out to the real magazines where the editors paid for contributions acceptance was not so easy.

He sent out poem after poem, but they almost invariably returned, with no leaf of promise; but he had supreme confidence that his doves of verse would find resting place in time and, as if editorial appreciation of Toronto, he flung another bolder and more trustful and the editor's drawer was stacked with enough Carman verses to last for years. best ones, which always made the greatest number of trips before acceptance, especially interested him, and he gave them pet names to commemorate their travels, such as "The Flying Dutchman," "Ulysses" and "The Wandering Jew." One manuscript he sent to Australia by way of San Francisco and it came back via the Suez Canal and London, visiting many editors, and this poem he christened "Captain Cook," because it circumnavigated the globe.

Mr. Carman has been on the editorial staff of half a dozen magazines or more and recently retired from the editorship of the "Literary World"; he has written a number of books, and has also had three published in London. He has a well-shaped head, a shock of wavy hair and a general premeditated eccentricity of attire that would make him conspicuous in any company.

HOPE GIVEN UP.

THE SCHOONER MARY AND HER CREW SUPPOSED TO HAVE GONE DOWN.

For the past week or ten days the wives and friends of the crew of the Schooner Mary have been hoping against hope. All hope, however, is now given up, and sympathy reigns in four families of Napanee.

On Monday, 6th Nov., the schooner left Fairhaven, N.Y., with a cargo of coal for Mr. J. R. Lake, of Napanee. Shortly after leaving port a violent storm arose, and the vessel is supposed to have gone to the bottom, perhaps with but little warning. The last seen of the Mary was off Presqu'ile, and it is supposed before the wind under bare poles. That was about 2 o'clock in the afternoon of Monday, the 6th.

The crew consisted of Captain Andrew Baird, of Napanee, and Edward Maracle, mate, and Al. Abrams and Hend. Davy, all of Tyendinaga. The Captain leaving a widow but no children. Maracle leaves a wife and two small children. Davy, a wife and two little ones, and Abrams, a widow and three boys. The sympathy of the whole county goes out to these bereaved ones, and it is safe to say that none of them will refuse any reasonable help during the anxious days to come.

The cargo was uninsured, but the vessel was. Mr. Arthur Dafoe was unremitting in his efforts to obtain news of the missing boat, and to do anything in his power to secure information from the various ports on both sides of the lake, and relieve the anxiety of the friends of the crew of the ill-fated schooner.

The Toronto Globe 15th Nov.—"We have given up all hope; our son and the whole crew are drowned," was made last night by Capt. Andrew Baird of the schooner Mary, which foundered at, at the shore, 171 Grange avenue. As he tremblingly handed a telegram to Mrs. Baird, Capt. Andrew Baird fell to a Globe reporter, both are ages, aged 16-perfectly overcome with emotion. "There is no longer any hope," Capt. Baird repeated. The schooner Mary left Fairhaven on Nov. 6th and at Oswego, Captain Baird was seen off Oswego, scudding along with bare poles. It was the last seen of her. She was to Napanee, so that no other vessel has been reported. The vessel which has gone to the bottom, with all on board. My theory is that she was filled her forecastle and cabin. Captain Baird has a family on board, her buoyancy was gone and she sank like a stone. Such is much read."

Capt. Baird was a splendid specimen of manhood. He was 45 years of age. The schooner Mary, which was built at Thorold twenty years ago, was in splendid condition and good repair and the owner was very careful, never entrusting her to men but those who understood how to navigate her. This was his second boat. He was married to Miss Rose Maracle, of Tyendinaga, and leaves a widow. His parents survive, also a brother, Mrs. Jones and a sister, Messers. Frank, of Toronto, George, of Columbus, Wallace, of Cleveland, and Mrs. John Hosack, wife of G.T.R. Conductor Hosack, Toronto. The vessel was valued at $1,500, and no insurance has been paid on her.

WAS IT THE MARY?

Captain Gus Hinckley, of the steamer Hinckley, reported at Oswego, a sailing wreckage in the vicinity of the Galloup Islands. He passed a water barrel and portions of a cabin painted green and white, supposed to belong to the ill-fated Mary.

H. L. COOK, M.D.,

Died at his home in Toronto, on Thursday, 16th Nov., after but a week's illness. Deceased was about 75 years of age, and for the past number of years was a resident of Toronto, removing there from Napanee. For a number of years the Dr. was a leading physician and surgeon of Napanee, and took a deep interest in its welfare. He served in the Town Council, and was for two terms our Mayor. He did much for the town, building the handsome Cook Block, on Dundas st., and four fine brick residences on Bridge street.

He leaves a widow and four children, Mrs. J. E. Herring, Mrs. E. H. Baines, and Miss Margaret Cook, Toronto, and Dr. Albert Cook, in New York State. Also an adopted daughter, Miss Gormley.

The Dr. was highly respected, and the announcement of his sudden decease, which will come as a shock to his many friends here, will be extended by a large circle of acquaintances throughout the county.

Our society opened the evening with a speech, thanking the pupils for the effort they rendered the evening. The important part of the programme was then taken up by the pupils, which rendered two selections pleasing to all. Vocal solos were given by Miss Lizzie Wilson, Hinch, and Miss Cicely Kennedy; mouth organ solo by Percy Smith; recitations by Percy Paul, on Birds, Arthur Emberry on Manufacture of Lead Pencils, and by James Pomeroy, on Influences of the late war. Robert Gorman and James Goodman, two laborers employed by the shops of the Kingston Locomotive Works, went very much injured, and Goodman will likely die. They were engaged in hoisting a three-ton cylinder into a plunger. The chain broke, and the cylinder dropped over a foot, causing Gorman to be flung and also knocking Gorman over. The former had both legs and arms broken, and Goodman injured about the head. Gorman's injuries are fatal, and he was also rupturing internally. Both were taken to the Hotel Dieu. Make Healthy Women.

Upon being taken into the stomach, the various ingredients are absorbed by the blood, and then find their way to every organ and tissue.

Some reach the uterine system. These allay inflammation, stop all drains on the system and make women regular.

Some strengthen the stomach. They help digestion and increase the appetite.

Others act on the bowels. They cure constipation.

Other ingredients stimulate the liver and kidneys in carrying off impurities from the system.

Others reach the nerves. These tone up the nervous system and supply vital energy, thereby curing the nervousness, irritability, and melancholy, to which so many women are subject.

The full effect of all the medicaments in the tablets is to arouse the entire female system to renewed life and vigor.

Improvement is noticed the first week.

A WIFE'S PRESENCE OF MIND.

One of our citizens with his wife had a little experience one day last week that is not very pleasant to relate. Having to make a business call at the farm of Mrs. Fa Flint, on Fourteenth Sideroad, it was necessary to go under the G. T. R. tracks and then up a high embankment. The road leading from the road upon which the farm buildings are is so narrow that to turn is out of the question, and a gate is on either side. After going under the bridge and reaching the gate upon the top of the embankment, the wife was left in the buggy, Mrs. Carlow and husband going to the house. The gate was open, so that by driving a few feet ahead the buggy would be clear of the road, and when they were ready to go they knew all they had to do was to back the horses down the narrow lane and turn around. The wife with the presence of mind, jumped from the buggy, tied the horses to the gate, and when the good job, in time to get them, knew all right before the gate. Such traps should be removed for the benefit of the general public.

BREWSTER'S MILLIONS

CHAPTER VI.

A FORTNIGHT later Montgomery Brewster had a new home. In strict obedience to his chief's command, Nopper Harrison had leased until the September following one of the most expensive apartments to be found in New York city. The rental was $23,000, and the shrewd financial representative had saved $1,000 for his employer by paying the sum in advance. But when he reported this bit of economy to Mr. Brewster he was surprised that it brought forth a frown. "I never saw a man who had less sense about money," muttered Nopper to himself. "Why, he spends it like a Chicago millionaire trying to get into New York society. If it were not for the rest of us he'd be a pauper in six months."

Paul Pettingill, to his own intense surprise and, it must be said, consternation, was engaged to redecorate certain rooms according to a plan suggested by the tenant. The rising young artist in a great flurry of excitement agreed to do the work for $300 and then blushed like a schoolgirl when he was informed by the practical Brewster that the paints and material for one room alone would cost twice as much.

"Petty, you have no more idea of business than a goat," criticised Montgomery. And Paul lowered his head in humble confession. "That man who calls himself your studio could figure on a piece of work with more intelligence than you reveal. I'll pay $300 for it, it's only a fair price, and I can't afford anything cheap in this place."

"At this rate you won't be able to afford anything," said Pettingill to himself.

And so it was that Pettingill and a corps of decorators soon turned the rooms into a confusion of scaffoldings and paint buckets, out of which in the end emerged something very distinguished. No one had ever thought Pettingill deficient in ideas, and this was his opportunity. The only drawback was the time limit which Brewster so remorselessly laid. Without that he felt that he could have done something splendid in the way of decorating; something that would make even the glory of Purvis de Chavannes turn pallid. With it he was obliged to curb his turbulent ideas, and he decided that a rich simplicity was the proper note. The result was gorgeous, but not too gorgeous—it had depth and distinction.

Elated and eager, he assisted Brewster in selecting furniture and hangings for each room, but he did not know that his employer was making conditional purchases of everything. Mr. Brewster had agreements with all the dealers to the effect that they were to buy everything back at a fair price if he desired to give up his establishment within a year. He adhered to this rule in all cases that called for the purchase outright of articles of luxuries. The bump of calculativeness in Monty Brewster's head was growing to abnormal proportions.

In retaining his rooms at Mrs. Gray's he gave the flimsy but pathetic excuse that he wanted a place in which he might find occasional respite of peace and quiet. When Mrs. Gray protested against this useless bit of extravagance his grief was so obviously genuine that her heart was touched, and there was a deep, fervent joy in her soul. She loved this fair faced boy, and tears of happiness came to her eyes when she was given this new proof of his loyalty and devotion. His rooms were kept for him just as if he had expected to occupy them every day and every night, notwithstanding the luxurious apartments he was to maintain elsewhere. The Oliver Optic books still lay in the shelf, all tattered and torn, but to Margaret the embodiment of prospective riches, promises of sweet hours to come. She knew Monty well enough to feel that he would not forget the dark little attic of old for all the splendors that might come with the new dispensation.

There was no little surprise when he sent out invitations for a large dinner. His grandfather had been dead less than a month, and society was somewhat scandalized by the plain symptoms of disrespect he was showing. No one had expected him to observe a prolonged season of mourning, but that he should disregard the formalities completely was rather shocking. Some of the older people, who had not long to live and who had been duly patterned cently denounced his heartlessness. It was not very gratifying to think of what might be in store for them if all Montgomery Brewster's money should go to the dark little attic of old Mrs. Ketchell changed her will, and two nephews were cut off entirely. A very modest and impecunious grandson of Joseph Garrity also was to sustain a severe change of fortune in the near future if the cards spoke correctly. Judge Van Woort, who was not expected to live through the night, got better immediately after hearing some one in the sickroom whisper that Montgomery Brewster was to give a big dinner. Naturally the heirs-to-be condemned young Brewster in no uncertain terms.

Nevertheless the dinner to be given by the grandson of old Edwin Peter Brewster was the talk of the town, and not one of the sixty invitations issued could be comfortably persuaded to miss it. Reports as to its magnificence were abroad long before the night set for the dinner. One of them had it that it was to cost $5,000 a plate. From that figure the legendary price receded to a mark as low as $500. Montgomery would have been only too glad to pay $3,000 or more, but some mysterious force prevailed on his mind a picture portrait of Swearengen Jones in the act of putting down a large black mark against him, and he forbore.

"I wish I knew whether I had to abide by the New York or the Montana standard of extravagance," Brewster said to himself. "I wonder if he ever sees the New York papers."

Late each night the last of the grand old Brewster family went to his bedroom, where, after dismissing his man, he settled down at his desk, with a pencil and a pad of paper. Lighting the candles, which were more easily managed, he found that things were much more costly, he thoughtfully and ruefully calculated his expenses for the day. Nopper Harrison and Elon Gardner had the receipts for all moneys spent, and Joe Brandon was keeping an official report, but the "chief," as they called him, could not go to sleep until he was satisfied in his own mind that he was keeping up the average. For the first two weeks it had been easy—in fact, he seemed to have quite a comfortable lead in the race. He had spent almost $100,000 in the fortnight, but he reflected that the greater part of it had gone into the yearly and not the daily expense account. He kept a "profit and loss" entry in his little private ledger, but it was not like any other account of the kind in the world. What the ordinary merchant would have charged to "loss" he jotted down as the "profit" side, and he was continually looking for opportunities to swell the total.

Rawles, who had been his grandfather's butler since the day after he landed in New York, came over to the grandson's establishment, greatly to the wrath and confusion of Mrs. Aunt Emmaline never forgave her nephew for these base and disturbing acts of treachery, as she called them.

One of Monty's most extraordinary financial feats grew out of the purchase of a $14,000 automobile. He blandly admitted to Nopper Harrison and the two secretaries that he intended to use it to practice with only, and that as soon as he learned how to run an "auto" as it should be run he expected to buy a good, sensible, durable machine for $7,000.

His staff officers frequently put their heads together to devise ways and means of curbing Monty's reckless extravagance. They were worried.

"He's like a sailor in port," protested Harrison. "Money is no object if he wants a thing, and—hang it—he seems to want everything he sees."

"It won't last long," Gardner said, reassuringly. "Like his namesake, Monte-Christo, the world is his just now, and he wants to enjoy it. He wants to get rid of it, it seems to me."

Whenever they reproached Brewster about it later he disarmed them by saying: "Now that I've got money I mean to give my friends a good time. Just what you'd do if you were in my place. What's money for, anyway?"

"But this $3,000 a plate dinner"—

"I'm going to give a dozen of them, and even who had been in my just ebbs. For years I've been entertained at people's houses and have been taken cruising on their yachts. They have always been short on wine, and what have I ever done for them? Nothing. Now that I can afford it, I am going to return some of these favors in my humble manner," he would softly in the hush.

"Thank the Lord!" he said softly in the hush.

The look of surprise he encountered in the faces of his guests brought him up with a jerk.

"That it didn't happen while we were dining," he added, with serene thankfulness. And his nonchalance scored for him in the idle game he was playing.

CHAPTER VII.

MR. BREWSTER'S butler was surprised and annoyed. For the first time in his official career he had ventured to subject so far as to manifest a personal interest in the welfare of his master. He was on the verge of assuming a responsibility which makes any servant intolerable. But after his interview he resolved that he would never again overstep his position. He made sure that it would be the last offense. The day following the dinner Rawles appeared before young Mr. Brewster and indicated by his manner that the call was an important one. Brewster was seated at his writing table, deep in thought. The exclamation that followed Rawles' cough of announcement was so sharp and so unmistakably fierce that all other evidence paled into insignificance. The butler's interruption came at a moment when Monty's mental arithmetic was pulling itself out of a very bad rut, and the cough drove it back into chaos.

"What is it?" he demanded irritably. Rawles had upset his calculations to the extent of seven or eight hundred dollars.

"I came to report han hunfortunate condition hamong the servants, sir," said Rawles, stiffening as his responsibility became more and more weighty. He had relaxed temporarily upon entering the room.

"What's the trouble?"

"The trouble's hended, sir."

"Then why bother me about it?"

"I thought it would be well for you to know, sir. The servants was going to ask for 'igher wages today, sir."

"You say they were going to ask? Aren't they?" And Monty's eyes lighted up at the thought of new possibilities.

"I convinced them, sir, as how they were getting good pay as it is, sir, and that they ought to be satisfied. They'd be a long time finding a better place and as good wages. They haven't been with you a week, and here they are striking for more pay. Really, sir, these American servants"—

"Rawles, that'll do!" exploded Monty. The butler's chin went up, and his cheeks grew redder than ever.

"I beg pardon, sir," he gasped, with a respectful but injured air.

"Rawles, you will kindly not interfere in such matters again. It is not only the privilege but the duty of every American to strike for higher pay whenever he feels like it, and I want it distinctly understood that I am heartily in favor of their attitude. You will kindly go back and tell them that after a reasonable length of service their wages—I mean wages—shall be increased. And don't meddle again, Rawles."

Late that afternoon Brewster dropped in at Mrs. DeMille's to talk over plans for the next dinner. He realized that in no other way could he squander his money with a better chance of getting its worth than by throwing himself boldly into society. It went easily, and there could be only one answer arising from it in the end—his own sense of disgust.

"So glad to see you, Monty," greeted Mrs. Dan glowingly, coming in with both hands. "Come upstairs and I'll give you some tea and a cigarette. I'm not at home to anybody."

"That's very good of you, Mrs. Dan," said he as they mounted the stairs. "I don't know what I'd do without your help." He was thinking how pretty she was.

"You'd be richer, at any rate," turning to smile upon him from the upper landing. "I was in tears half the night, Monty, over that glass service," she said after finding a comfortable place among the cushions of a divan. Brewster dropped into a roomy, lazy chair in front of her as he responded carelessly:

"It amounted to nothing. Of course it was very annoying that it should happen while the guests were still there." Then he added gravely: "In strict confidence, I had planned to have it fall just as we were pushing back our chairs, but the confounded thing disappointed me. That's the trouble with these automatic climaxes—they usually hang fire. It was to have been a sort of fall of Babylon effect, you know."

For a lively quarter of an hour they discussed people about town, liberally approving the slandered and denouncing the slanderers. A still better quarter of an hour ensued when together they made up the list of dinner guests. He moved a little writing table up to the divan, and she looked on eagerly while he wrote down the names she suggested after many puckerings of her fair, arched pencil brow, and then three lines through them when she changed her mind. Mrs. Dan DeMille handled her people without gloves in mauling up Monty's lists. The dinners were not hers, and she could afford to do as she pleased with his. He was broad and tall and she was not slow to see that he was indifferent. He did not care who the guests were or how they came; he merely wished to make sure of their presence. His only blunder was the rather difficult recommendation that Barbara Drew be asked again. If he observed that Mrs. Dan's head sank a little closer to the paper, he attached no importance to the movement. He could not see that her eyes grew narrow, and he paid no attention to the little catch in her breath.

"Wouldn't that be a little—just a little pronounced?" she asked, lightly enough.

"You mean—that people might talk?" "She might feel conspicuously present."

"Do you think so? We are such good friends, you know."

"Of course if you'd like to have her," slowly and doubtfully, "why, put her name down. But you evidently haven't seen that." Mrs. Dan pointed to a copy of the Trumpet which lay on the table.

When he had handed her the paper she said, "The Censor is growing facetious at your expense."

"I am getting on in society with a vengeance if that one starts in to write about me. Listen to this"—she had pointed out to him the obnoxious paragraph: "If Brewster drew a diamond flush do you suppose he'd catch the queen? And if he caught her how long do you think she'd remain Drew? Or if she Drew Brewster would she be willing to learn such a game as Monte?"

The next morning a writer who signed himself The Censor got a thrashing, and one Montgomery Brewster had his name in the papers, surrounded by fulsome words of praise.

CHAPTER VIII.

ONE morning not long after the incidents just related Brewster lay in bed staring at the ceiling, deep in thought. There was a worried pucker on his forehead, half hidden by the rumpled hair, and his eyes were wide and sleepless. He had dined at the Drews' the evening before and had had an awkward time of it. Barbara was present at the dinner. A still longer quarter of an hour ensued when together they made up the list of dinner guests. He moved a little writing table up to the divan, and she looked on eagerly while he wrote down the names she suggested after many puckerings of her fair, arched pencil brow, and then three lines through them when she changed her mind. Mrs. Dan DeMille handled her people without gloves

THE BLOOD AND MOUNTAIN CLIMBING.

A European scientist, Raoul Bayeux, has been counting the red corpuscles in human blood during ascensions of Mont Blac. M. Bayeux draws the following conclusions from his experiments. The blood undergoes a rapid and considerable increase in the number of red globules when one passes from an altitude to a higher level. If one remains in the latter place the first number of globules is found to diminish slightly, but not to a great extent in a few hours. Descending to the starting point makes the number diminish to a greater degree, but it is still above what it was before the ascension. He finds that the number has fallen to the original second ascension made before the value rises a new increase which is greater than is remarked in the first ascension.

CASTORIA
Bears the Signature of Chas. H. Fletcher. In Use For Over 30 Years

—Cecil B. Smith, C.E., in an article in Queen's Quarterly, touches upon the conditions of Ontario's timber supply, as well as the electrical possibilities of the province. We are, he declares, nearer to exhaustion in our pine supply than is commonly supposed, and intelligent foresight should lead us to begin reafforesting our waste places. In Mr. Smith's opinion, all such lands as are found in Northern Hastings and Addington should be taken back by the crown and planted to forest. This would not only provide for a future timber supply, but would help to conserve our water powers as well.

FIRE AT CENTREVILLE.

On Wednesday morning the store and dwelling of Mr. John Hinch, Centreville, was destroyed by fire. The property destroyed was a large brick store and dwelling combined, and the finest residence in the village. Mr. Hinch carried the following insurance, which will not half cover the loss, on stock $1,500, furniture $500, building $2,500. We understand but little was saved of either stock or household effects, etc.

NEW LOCK-UP NEEDED.

The Police Committee are taking into consideration the removal of the lock-up from its present quarters, back of the fire hall, to under the town hall. On Monday evening Chief Graham submitted a plan of a lock-up that would be adapted to the proposed new quarters. There is certainly great need for a change. The present lock-up is not properly situated and is very difficult to heat, whereas the furnace in the town hall basement would in a great measure suffice for heating. The old place is very unhandy for putting a prisoner in, and a change will probably be made in the near future.

We fancy the number present was a surprise to the trio. We congratulate the ladies who spared no trouble in making the concert a success, especially Mrs. Dr. Madore, who spent much time in arranging for it.

$1000. Reward
Recent investigations have disclosed the fact that unscrupulous handlers of flour are endeavoring to take advantage of the great popularity of Ogilvie's "Royal Household" Flour by refilling, with cheap inferior flour, the bags and barrels bearing the Ogilvie Brand, and selling it as the genuine article.
In order to bring the guilty parties to justice we offer the following reward.

REWARD
The Ogilvie Flour Mills Co., Ltd. will pay One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00) for such evidence as will result in the conviction of any person, persons, firms or corporations who may be refilling, their bags or barrels with flour of other manufacture and selling the same as flour manufactured by the Ogilvie Flour Mills Co. BROKEN ALABASTER BOX

"SHE HATH DONE WHAT SHE COULD," HIS COMMENDATION.

SELF SACRIFICE NOT WASTED

Christ's Satisfaction of the Woman's Apparently Useless Deed Is Typical of the Master's Attitude Always to Those Who Do What They Can and All They Can — Draw Lessons of Gratitude.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1905, by Frederick Dyer, at Toronto, in the Department at Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Nov. 12.—From the incident of the broken alabaster box the preacher in this sermon draws lessons of the gratitude which men should feel for the self sacrifice of mothers, sisters and wives. The text is Mark xiv., 8, "She hath done what she could."

Some people are like the dead swimming the "cities of the plain." They have no outlook. They would make all the streams of the surrounding hillsides tributaries to their reservoirs. They would gather into their depths the waters from the fountains beneath and from the showers over head. But, though they take in every thing they touch they never have any outflowings. They would never give anything to anybody else unless they were compelled so to do. Their hands are like steel traps. They keep the palms open only as long as they have nothing on them. But as soon as anything touches their skin their open palms clip shut and every finger becomes a vise and every muscle as rigid as a band of steel. Their doctrine is, "What is yours ought to be mine and what is mine is my own." Truly they hang on to everything they can. Their appetites are omnivorous. But, like great stagnant pools, they become stenchful through their insolubility. Their love of other people is completely circumscribed by their love of self.

Selfish love has even a more contemptible characteristic than a mere brutal love for self. As a rule, selfish men consider it a generous reflection upon themselves if other people are not just as mean and selfish as they are. When any one makes a sacrifice for another they give themselves to fault finding, are always complaining and always trying to depreciate the good action that person has tried to do. If a man like Andrew Carnegie endows a library they make a pretending voice and cry, saying: "What is the good of giving a pile of books to a lot of workingmen who can't read?" Why does he not give them a loaf of bread instead of a printed page?" If a philanthropist offers to give a loaf of bread every midnight to every person who comes for it they say: "What is the use of feeding a lot of dirty tramps and dead beats? These men ought to be made to work as I have to work." Thus whomever we turn we find some men, and, alas, they are many with these two miserable characteristics—they refuse to do anything for any one else, and they find fault with all those who are trying to do what these selfish men ought to do.

Some of these carping, selfish, faultfinding critics were in the home of Simon the leper in the time of Christ, as they are in the homes of our modern Bethanys. They never give a cent to any one if they can help it, and they hate to see any one else give away a cent. Thus when the woman of my text, to show her love for Christ, entered the dining hall and broke an alabaster box and poured the ointment of spikenard, very precious, upon Christ's head they commenced to complain. "Absurd, absurd!" they cried. "That ointment could have been sold for 300 pence and given to the poor. Why all this waste?" Then said Jesus: "Let her alone. She hath wrought a good work on me, for ye have the poor with you always, and whensoever ye will ye may do them good, but me ye have not always." Then Christ uttered the words of my text, "She hath done what she could." That is the very best of her power she had shown her true love for Jesus Christ.

Genuine and significant must have been the act of this woman of my text to have brought forth such an encomium from the Saviour as that. It is Jesus the only being who has had a woman break over his head an alabaster box of ointment of spikenard very precious? Have not some of us been surrounded in our babyhood, in our boyhood, in our young manhood, in our middle age and old age, by just such noble self-sacrificing women, who have for us literally "spent their all to do what they could"? Yes, most of us can answer, "we have. We have." I would like to call to recollection some of our obligations, some of the services that we have received from devoted women, who could have laid down their lives if it had been necessary for our welfare. They literally did all they could to bring to us our truest and fullest mental and physical and spiritual development.

Then we shall begin to find these female characters, who have broken for us their alabaster box of ointment of spikenard very precious. Naturally we start with that sweet face that hovered about our cradle. Then we go back to the dim recollections of childhood we remember that mother was always busy. She was busy cleaning the parlors, or making the beds, or going out to market, or busy with her needle at a rag bag, or busied with the week's clean washing. We never remember her asleep unless she was sick in bed under the doctor's care, or unless we crawled under her covers in the early morning when we were frightened from dreaming bad dreams. She was always busy.

Turn over the portraits in the family album. "There," you say, "is my first picture. Mother told me it was taken just a short time after I was christened. She remembers that little dress with her own hands, and she thought so much of that dress that she kept it all these years. After she was dead and we were going through her things I found it. The lace was just as you see it there. She must have thought a good deal of me to put so much work on that dress when she had so much to do. And there is my picture taken just after my long attack of typhoid fever. My, I look sick there, don't I? They tell me she never left my room for six long weeks. The doctors gave me up, and they shut me out. They would have died but for her. And furthermore they say that it was her devotion to me that broke down her health and made her a lifelong invalid."

Then you turn over another page of the old album, and you say: "Here is my picture when I was a college boy. We were having a rough time financially, and I used to get awfully discouraged but mother was my support. She used to write me letters that cheered to me. She never lost heart, no matter how black the clouds were. And when I think of her I think of her as that noble, purer, better or more self-sacrificing woman than she never lived. All that I am is the result of her sacrifices made in the crises of my early life."

"Oh," you say, "I had a good mother. She certainly did for me what she could."

Cannot we all say that our mothers have broken for us the alabaster box of ointment of spikenard, very precious? Have they not done what they did what they could? Cannot we be as eulogistic of our mothers as Sir Thomas More was of his? Sir Thomas More was a very little boy his mother went off on a visit. He wrote to her the first letter he ever wrote. It read:

Your absence all but ill endure,
And none so ill as Thomas More.

As he grew older and came to great fame he still seemed to feel that he could not do anything unless he had first gone and told her and asked her advice. He wrote every detail of his life to her. He did so almost every day of the week. At her death there were found over 1,400 letters penned to her by her noble son. And one of the last acts which he did before she died was to send one of his books to her. On the beautiful words written upon the flyleaf: "For her who was the center of her affections and promotions I have transcribed the few little essays that follow. The whole praise-worthiness of my mother praises from the heart. With one it is a tribute of judgment, with the other it is a gift from thankfulness. Was not that tribute of England's great statesman to his mother most beautiful? Yet cannot we all give our mothers the same tribute? Was there in our youth any worthy or meritorious act that was not of her suggesting or inspiring?

Is not our position in the world today a tribute a tribute for what she did for us? A great cave, like the Mammoth cave of Kentucky, has lately been discovered in Tasmania. Travelers tell us that after the torches have been put out some of the caves of the roof are ablaze with light from the millions of glowworms which are kindling their phosphorescent lanterns on the walls and the roof of rock. So every place in the dark corridors of the past we see aglow with the flame of maternal self-sacrifice. We see these lights at the cradle; we see them brilliant at the side of the boy at school or college hall and afterward in the struggles of our professional and mercantile careers. Wherever we turn as long as our mothers were alive, we knew that they were doing for us the best they could. Ah, many and many are the tears they broke for us the alabaster box of ointment of spikenard very precious. To-day we lay our garlands of tribute upon the graves of the beloved mothers who cheerfully did for us what they could.

But next to our mothers I would speak of the mothers of our children. As I prattle the sweet-faced woman who bent over our cradle I would now say a few words in reference to the wives who have stood by us so faithfully and nobly during our struggles of young manhood and middle age. I hope, will continue so to do in our old age If God will let them live until their hair is whitened and their step becomes infirm. When I look into the past I see how awful might have been the results if we had not had a wife who instead of a good mother. In the same way I shudder as I think of what our lives would have been if our wives had been selfish or lazy or unworthy instead of being the self-sacrificing, devoted women whom God has given us.

The older I grow and the more I see of men the more I have to admire, and are, to a great extent, the outgrowths of what their wives have done for them. Every husband who is what he appears to me the representative of a wife whom perhaps I have never seen. When Victor Hugo received the seventieth birthday his friends from all over the world sent to him gifts of flowers. His home was simply deluged with them. Showing one of his rooms filled with flowers to a friend, he turned and said: "Flowers to me have an individual flavor. They speak the peculiar language of the people who send them. Now, most of the donors of these flowers I have never seen, and yet from the flowers themselves I can tell who my friends are. That magnificent lily came from a French florist's greenhouse. The friend who sent us that must have been a well-to-do Parisian. This bunch of herbs could only grow on the Garonne, and that blue star flower can be found nowhere but in Normandy." Thus he went on, giving the history of the different baskets and bouquets and collections of wild flowers which had been sent to him as birthday gifts. As Victor Hugo read the characters of his unseen friends by the language of the flowers, I read the characters of wives by the conduct of their husbands.

Inevitably when you find a consecrated, earnest man working for Christ in the church you will find a noble, devoted wife back of that man, who is chiefly responsible for that man's consecration. Of course there are exceptions to all rules, but exceptions do not destroy the rules. So invariable has been my experience in this respect that when I find a man joining the church without his wife I think more of her than I can. I can remember just how she looked when I first met her. She was the most beautiful girl in Chicago. She was one who always lived to do good. When sickness came into our congregation she was there. Our babies were her babies, our troubles were her troubles, our joys were hers. It was a stormy day, the good Friday before Easter of 1902, that I last saw her. I had been out visiting my sick father. She came down to welcome me home. She was always thinking of others. She never thought of herself. It was a biting, tempestuous day, and she caught cold. Pneumonia settled her lungs. In one week she was dead, and in two weeks my father was dead. It seemed as though the sorrow of one home was too much to bear. And yet, to-day, as the memories of those patient, loving Christian women arise before me, I wonder how they lived. Where are they pleading for us to go? They have gone to their rest, but they have left behind them influences which will meet you there. Will you let their sacrifices lead you to Christ, that in his presence you may dwell with them forever? Aye, their alabaster boxes of ointment of spikenard very precious should not be too costly if by that sacrifice they could win your immortal souls and your companionship in heaven. Truly they have done for us all they could to bring about that glorious consummation.

It is unprofitable to keep more sheep than one can properly care for.

THE ANGEL OF PEACE.

By a Banker.

After toiling away for more than eighteen months—months of horror, months of anxiety, months of heartbreaks and of gnawing heartache and lamentation—the dread, grewsome, ghastly specter of war has at last taken its flight to those rather regions of darkness and of woe whence he came forth, and the Angel of Peace, with her silvery wings over those vast levels of forest, comfields and prairies, has at last settled down to pruning hooks, and that mighty, deadly weapons, named Dreadnaught, are rapidly being beaten into the sorrel vanes of the enemy, the overwhelming dread, grewsome, ghastly specter of war has

CURES CATARRHAL DEAFNESS.

ONE WEEK'S USE OF HYOMEI DID MORE THAN SIX MONTHS' TREATMENT BY SPECIALISTS.

In the treatment of deafness which is often a result of catarrh, Hyomei acts almost immediately upon the inflamed membrane and the hearing begins to return at once.

Miss Mertie, of Matteawan, N. Y., says: "Hyomei is truly wonderful. I have used it but a short time and see a great change in my condition. My hearing is improving rapidly and I had no idea I would improve so much in so short a time. My catarrh which was very offensive has left me entirely, and others, has lost its hard hold entirely. I have spent a great deal of money with catarrh specialists, and can truly say that since I began their treatment I have not paid out as much for Hyomei."

A complete outfit costs but $1.00, and consists of an inhaler that can be carried in the vest pocket, a medicine dropper, and a bottle of Hyomei. The inhaler will last a lifetime and there is enough Hyomei for several weeks' treatment. Additional bottles of Hyomei can be procured for 50 cents. Dr. Sproule & Company guarantee with the fees charged by specialists you cannot obtain Hyomei of your dealer, it will be forwarded by mail, postage paid, on receipt of price. PRESENTATION.

At the regular meeting of the Napanee cheese board, last Friday afternoon, the secretary was instructed to meet again First Friday in May, 1906. Mr. W. H. Gordanier, who has so faithfully discharged the duties of secretary for the cheese board in the last twenty-five years, was presented with a handsome mic ael as a memento of his services. Mr. Gordanier then left the platform, since the cheese board was started in Napanee, and purposes leaving in a few weeks to make his home in Tacoma, Wash. Many expressions of good will were taken from members of the board as to Mr. Gordanier's efficient services during that long time.

DIED IN MANITOBA.

We are in receipt of a letter from Mr. T. W. Miller, Secretary of L. O. L. Lodge No. 1742, Shoal Lake, Man., stating that Francis Hodge died there on the 3d Nov., and was buried by the Orange Lodge of that place, on the 5th inst. Mr. Miller states that deceased was known to have lived in Napanee in early times, and asks us to make announcement of his death, that his relatives and friends may learn the facts. As we can ascertain deceased was Thomas Francis Hodge, formerly a prosperous farmer of Sheffield, near Tamworth, who went to the Western States, and later to Manitoba. He also was years ago receve of the Township of Sheffield and postmaster at Tamworth. Later he conducted the Centennial Hotel, Napanee, and a record was probably about sixty years of age, and leaves a widow, residing at Gleneora, Ont.

THE NAPANEE POULTRY, PIGEON AND PET STOCK ASSOCIATION.

The canvassing committee, not being able to see personally the farmers of the county, invite them to call at either F. Chinneck's Jewelry Store or Jas. Withers' Tailoring Establishment, and help this good cause along by paying $1.00, membership fee, which entitles them to the free admission of the three days' show on the 16th, 17th and 18th. Already good results are showing up for the prospect of a poultry show here. A number of cities and farmers have and are going to send away for good birds to exhibit. Let others do the same. A farmer said it was well worth a dollar to him joining, if it brought in a better class of fowls raised even in the town, as he could then come in and buy a bird or two locally and see what he was paying for, instead of sending away by strangers and likely being fooled when the bird arrived, after paying express charges too.

It might be stated just here that great prizes will be offered during the winter for dressed fowls and ducks, turkeys and geese, if sufficient interest are created from the county and town councils to enable them to do so.

The Association meets every Friday night at 7.30 p.m., in the town council chambers, when all from the town and county are cordially invited to attend and lend the boys a helping hand. It is hoped to be able to have a government experimental man here to lecture and answer questions on the management of poultry and the preparing of it for the market.

Let us in closing just say that this, the first show here, will assuredly be a great success if the county gives it liberal support, as we believe it will and as all the western counties do their shows.

A LITTLE TYRANT.

There is no tyrant like a teething baby. The temper isn't due to organic ailment, but the little one suffers worse than the rest of the family. He doesn't know what is the matter—they do. But baby need not suffer longer than it takes to make him well if the mother will give him Baby's Own Tablets. They ease the tender gums and bring the teeth through painlessly and without tears. Mrs. C. Connelly, St. Laurent, Man., says, "Some months ago my little girl's health became so bad that we felt very anxious. She was teething and suffered so much that we did not know what to do for her. I was advised to try Baby's Own Tablets and from almost the first dose she began to improve, and were was no further trouble. She is now in the best of health, thanks to the Tablets." The Tablets cure all the minor ailments of children, and are a boon to life to both mother and child. They always do good—they cannot possibly do harm. Try them and you will use no other medicine for your little one. Sold by all druggists or sent by mail at 25 cents a box by writing the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

—Mr. C. D. Wager, Enterprise, has just sold to H. Saunders and Joseph Pechman, importers of Thoroughbred Pigs, Burford, Ont., his herd of ten sows, nice lot, and one entire (males all under one year), for the handsome sum of $975.00. The sale will be stopped on the 4th Dec., to Burford station, Oxford Co. They are a fine lot, bred from Lord Banff's Conqueror, a noted sire who stands at the head of his breed. The sale was made through an advertisement in The Beaver.

SELL YOUR COLD FOR $1?

You surely won't stop at a dollar bill to cure that horrid suffering cold. Go to any druggist and get Catarrhozone and your cold will be a thing of the past. There is no comfort whatever in the swift way Catarrhozone kills colds. But were you consider the penetrating, healing and antiseptic qualities of Catarrhozone, perhaps it's not so wonderful. Certainly there is no remedy half so prompt for colds and catarrh as Catarrhozone. Refuse a substitute and insist on having only "Catarrhozone."

FAMOUS PEOPLE

BY FANNIE M. LOTHROP

LADY HENRY SOMERSET

A Leader in British Philanthropic Work

Lady Henry Somerset, president of the British Temperance Women's Association, and a leader in all philanthropic and social reform work, is a mighty influence for good, and has consecrated herself and her fortune to the service of humanity. She was born in England, the daughter of Earl Somers, for thirty years a member of the House of Lords and a man of noble character who cared little for society, but spent his time in travel and scientific research. Ruskin, Garibaldi and Mazzini were his closest friends. He fell in love with the lady who became his wife through a portrait by Watts exhibited in London. It appealed to him as no living or painted woman ever had; he sought the original, and after a romantic courtship, married her.

Lady Isabel, later Lady Somerset, was born in 1851, and even in the days of her girlhood found in social questions a theme of deep interest, and was greatly influenced by the works of John Stuart Mill. After her presentation at Court she was caught in the social whirl and for years was a lady of fashion and pleasure, from which the present earnest, self-denying and enthusiastic worker for humanity was evolved in the days of sorrow, suffering and unhappiness through which she was soon to pass.

When she was twenty-one she married Lord Henry Somerset, second son of the Duke of Beaufort. The serious side of an unfortunate married life turned her mind to higher things; she helped those who needed it and was an angel of pity and inspiration. She was interested in Biblical criticism, and in the maze of disputes and sophistries of many writers. One day while walking and thinking in her garden, she even doubted the existence of God. Then it seemed to her as if she heard an actual voice speaking to her very soul: "Art as if I were, and thou shalt know that I am."

Vividly impressed she went to her room, read her Bible, and in the morning told her friends she was going to retire from the world for a time. Taking her boy she went to Eastner Castle, a beautiful place in the Malvern Hills, and fought out her battle with the bible, realized her destiny, and consecrated herself to the service of society, determined to give her strength to helping the world. With the poor at her own gates she started a temperance society, and gave an address in the school-room. Later she held Bible meetings in the billiard-room of the Castle, and thus began the unselfish work for good that has literally encircled the world in its influence and inspiration.

Entered according to Act of the Parliament of Canada, in the year 1905, by W. F. Black, at the Department of Agriculture.

NEWBURGH.

The choir of the Methodist church furnished the music for the platform meeting in Wesley on Monday evening. D. A. Noble was chairman, and Rev. Mr. Neales was one of the speakers. After the meeting the choir were very hospitably entertained by the Wesley people.

Dr. G. Millar, of the N. H. S. staff, received the best intelligence on Thursday, of the safe arrival of his father in Warton on Wednesday. Mr. Millar, who for some months has been ailing, was not to back until that week. Mr. Millar's many friends extend him their sympathy.

On Sunday evening Mrs. Burdette will sing a solo at Shannonville Methodist church. The late Mrs. Burdette was one of Newburgh's most talented ladies, and was a faithful member of the Methodist church. Two years ago she was made a life member of the Epworth League. Mr. Dennard was 74 years of age. Besides her husband, Mrs. Dix leaves a daughter, of California; Mrs. Hodgins, of Napanee, and Mrs. Mortimer Cronk, of Pomeroy, Newburgh; Miss Louise Burdette, New York; Miss Grace Burdette, Toronto; Mrs. Burton, of Vineland, and Mr. Frank Burdette, of Montreal. The funeral was held at the home, on Tuesday afternoon, Rev. Mr. Neales officiating.

Miss Lily Gardiner is supplying on the High School staff during the absence of Miss Jones.

Mrs. Dan. Richmond, spent a few days last week with his grandmother, Mrs. Sharpe.

James Davy is visiting his daughter in Napanee.

Mr. George Mills, Napanee, was in town on Wednesday.

Mrs. J. H. Clark, who is visiting her son, Sharpe, in Wellington, was taken ill last week. Word was received, this week, however that she was better.

Mrs. Newburgh Pharmacy looks after a good part of the mail.

Miss Walter Sexsmith is under the doctor's care.

Miss Alma Brasco spent last week with friends in Napanee.

The news of the election of Hon. A. G. Aylesworth to North York on Wednesday was received by our villagers with great satisfaction. Newburgh is proud of the boy who went out from here a moderate, and has made a name for himself. It is many years since Allan Aylesworth left this village on his way to the school house on the hill. It is many years since the new Postmaster General lived here, but the friends of the family in this village have known him of later years are pleased to see him in such a high position. Aylesworth homestead lies in the southern part of the village, and here you will find the father, Allan Aylesworth, Minister, hale and hearty. Mr. Aylesworth, Sr., has retired from farm and still takes an active part in the affairs of the village. He is greatly esteemed by his neighbors.

Miss Jessie Kellar has returned home.

John Shorts is working for M. Ryan.

With their concert on Dec. 18th, but a few weeks off, the Epworth League are working hard to make it the success that it deserves to be. Miss Fiske, always a favorite with a Newburgh audience, will be heard in "The Queen Bess." Mr. Hedley, whose singing has won much favor when coming to Newburgh, will also sing during the evening. The quartette, "The Professor at Home" by Master Richard Wood and Messrs. Moore and Storey, is decidedly new to this district and will certainly make a hit. There will be two drills, a Dumbbell drill, and the Columbian drill, the latter introducing the song hit of last season, "Oh! Miss Sadie Jane." The Accompanist, Miss Young, will open the programme with one of her popular piano solos. Think of it! Three splendid programmes in twelve days numbers by Cameron, the pioneer of classical concerts and the finest of all to win a ring. And is funny what a difference just a few days makes. Those reserved seat sale with open on Monday last, 9 a.m., and closed at 6 p.m. Tickets, 25c; reserved seats 35c.

All Should be Re-elected

Mr. Editor,—Will you kindly permit me through your columns to make a suggestion to the rate-payers of Napanee that at the next meeting be presented with a special mandate from the people, viz., to construct a municipal hard-coal plant. They entered into this enterprise, and have given a great deal of time and attention to the matter, and have been met with a great and unscrupulous opposition. This opposition is practically from one man, who is fighting the council and the people. He has tried to defeat them up, they have gone on with the work as he thought it would be to their advantage to do. Now, in the face of this opposition, and through no fault of their own, they find their work uncompleted. They are familiar with every detail, and should be re-instated in their offices. What would be done in any business concern under like circumstances? Every man would be re-appointed to finish his work. Council after council and year after year, look at their municipal business as they would their private business? Forget the petty party quarrels. If it knows, it is the duty of the citizens of Napanee in such a crisis to stand by any other motive than straight business principles. Let those who are aspiring to municipal honors refrain from coming out for another season or enter the field when there are more favorable circumstances. The present council should be re-elected by acclamation. We owe it to them; we owe it to the town; we owe it to ourselves. The duty of the citizens of the town stand together, and give no heed to the opponents of justice and fair play of such unfairness and prejudice. Let us owe to their duties in opposing the electric light, that there will be no possible room for any one to doubt as to where the people stand.

THE OUTLOOK FOR IMPROVED LIVE STOCK.

It would appear from the high prices realized at recent sales of pure bred live stock that the farmers and breeders throughout the country are fully alive to the importance of improving the standard of their herds of both beef cattle and dairy cows. The contention that there is always a demand for good stock at handsome prices is fully borne out. A good animal costs no more to feed than an inferior one and many and more is the farmer becoming convinced of the fact that although the first cost of the introduction of a pure bred sire is greater, the advantage that the improvement resulting justifies the outlay will in the corresponding increase in the herd value. Not only are breeders of established herds introducing new blood but foundations are now being laid by many men not hitherto considered breeders of pure bred stock, and go into the sale of Shorthorns 100 head brought $343,125.00, an average of $343.25 each. At the Flatt sale at Hamilton 47 animals were sold for $27,400, an average of $426.61. This lot included a dozen or more calves under a months of age. The highest price paid for a bull was $1,350, and for a cow $1,600, amounts paid ranged from these down to $115. At the Isaac Usmak sale 43 animals realized $9,235, an average price of about $200. One bull brought $700 and one cow $870. In this lot was included a number of calves under two months of age. These prices are probably the highest ever realized for animals of the Ayrshire breed. That the teachings of the Farmers' Institutes, the Live Stock Associations and the work of the Dominion and Provincial Departments of Agriculture is bearing results is apparent from the above facts.

Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women

They are the prescription of a specialist.

This is an age of specialists,—men who give all their time, study, and practice to some particular branch of medicine. There are specialists of the eye, specialists in diseases of the lungs, specialists in diseases of women. It costs something to get a prescription from a specialist, but it is worth all it costs, when you get it.

Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women are the prescription of Dr. Hugo, of Paris, a specialist of forty years' experience in diseases of women.

It embraces the latest medical discoveries of the other skilled physicians in the world. It might be called a medical encyclopedia of the world's best specialists.

No ordinary physician can prescribe such a remedy. The better the physician, the nearer it is to his prescription to that of Dr. Hugo.

Thousands of women in Europe have paid $50 for a consultation with Dr. Hugo and got the same remedy. Considering the benefit they received from it, it was worth $50, but it costs women now only 50c. for six dozen tablets—enough for an extended treatment.

It is a compound remedy containing all the tonics and alteratives that any woman can need, no matter what her condition. For women suffering from any down condition, or any weakness peculiar to her sex, it is now acknowledged to be beyond doubt or question the best remedy available to-day. It mikes healthy women.

AN ANCIENT POEM.

Mrs. George Hunter, Lachute Mills, Que., forwards us the following letter. The clipping is clear and distinct, but the paper is yellow with age, a similar quality of paper is pasted on the back to preserve it, and the name Sarah Anderson, Chatham, written across the top. It is probably a clipping from the Napanee Bee, the first paper printed here at that time, the publisher being Rev. W. Greenleaf, a Methodist minister, who built his own hand press, and was also skilful in making wood type and stereotype plates. How he was we are at a loss to say.

Dear Sir,—Inclosed I send you a clipping from some Napanee paper. Could you tell me what paper it was printed in. I found it in an old Bible that was given to me. I would like to have it reprinted if you would be kind enough to print it in the Beaver sometime. I would like to know the words and think it cheered and kept the world from getting any worse than it is. If you do not wish to print it, enclosed I send you stamp to return it to me, I can get them printed here, but thought you might tell me what paper it was taken from.

CENTENARY OF METHODISM.

On former days we'll pass a thought, When two or three, by Wesley taught, Received the Word—joined in his prayer, etc.

Brought others to take counsel, where, Small as then the Work appeared, Soon a thousand hearts it cheered.

Ar men of Earth the work opposed, And mobs arose, and churches closed— By sticks and fields, of large repute, Souls locked—to hear the Word of Quiet—etc.

Meeting there in Jesus' name, 'Lo! they sought and spread the flame, etc.

Though evil men have prophesied The Work would stop when Wesley died.

From year to year that work expands From Europe and Pagan lands; Jesus owns and blesses still— Yea, and so will we will.

Now, Missions, shout with Heaven's smiles,

To different lands and different isles— The throng of tribes of many a shore Have join with what we have before.

Lifting up their hands to God, And they feel it is a cleansing blood.

Th. Bid Men now with us unite— To praise the Lord is their delight— Where moves our breast to be glad praise.

In these our Centenarian days; Holy raptures, rising still, Do our souls with glory fill.

With Health already here begun, But oh the blessings overrun, Hear are our Missions and our Schools—

Our plans are tried, and, wise our Rules;

Our we less than now record Our thanks-offerings to the Lord?

Nor are our future prospects dear; Tho' from through the waves shall press;

With Men and means increasing still, The Christ at Paris the world shall fill.

Ih gither with our prospects rise! Th. Faith hath caught and holds the prize!

"SAVED MY LIFE"

—That's what a prominent druggist said of Scott's Emulsion a short time ago. As a rule we don't use or refer to testimonials in addressing the public, but the above remark and similar expressions are made so often in connection with Scott's Emulsion that they are worthy of occasional note. From infancy to old age Scott's Emulsion offers a reliable means of remedying improper and weak development, restoring lost flesh and vitality, and repairing waste. The action of Scott's Emulsion is no more of a secret than the composition of the Emulsion itself. What it does it does through nourishment—the kind of nourishment that cannot be obtained in ordinary food. No system is too weak or delicate to retain Scott's Emulsion and gather good from it.

We will send you a sample free.

THE INNING OF THE FARMERS.

The following article from the Hoard's Dairyman may apply equally to Canada.

Recent statements by Secretary of Agriculture Wilson regarding the prosperous condition of the farming interests of the United States are not a little startling and may be fairly taken as an indication that the farming industry is at the foundation of the prosperity which has prevailed in recent years.

Secretary Wilson is quoted as saying: "Of all of the gold mined in the world, since the time of Columbus, estimated at $11,200,000,000, would not equal in value the products of American farms in the two years, 1904 and 1905. Inasmuch as it is now known that the gathered product of American farms for the year 1905 greatly exceeds that of either of the years mentioned, a startling conclusion is reached that the farm crops for the present year are equal in value more than one-half of all the gold produced in the world since the discovery of America."

In this connection it should be understood that Secretary Wilson's statement is not based upon estimates of conditions of crops, but is based upon the accomplished results and represents in reliable figures the actual returns of the harvests of the head of the Agricultural Department. As to the Secretary Wilson's statements regarding the condition in the farming industry which affects all other industries, there is given to extent than is generally supposed. The fact that all over the country there is no complaint of scarcity of farm help, but, on the contrary, there is an abundance of it, and apparently widely distributed, indicates that in a golden harvest.

The effect upon certain of the industries, particularly those which are dependent upon the farmers for their raw material, and which have suffered severely from the disorganization of the farming industry, will be immediate and beneficial. The manufacturers of implements, of vehicles, of harness, of boots and shoes, of clothing, of furniture, of hardware, of groceries, of dry goods, of drugs, are among those who will feel the benefit of the prosperous condition of the farmers. Bankers are also among those who will profit by the prosperity of the farmers, for the farmers will have money to deposit in the banks, and will not be borrowers of money. The merchants of the cities will also feel the benefit of the prosperous condition of the farmers, for the farmers will have money to buy with, and will not be compelled to run in debt for supplies.

The members of the prosperity of the farming community are not confined to the class of producers of raw material, but extend to all classes of the community and to all conditions, which are dependent upon the farmers for their prosperity. The farmers are the people prosperity.

BREWSTER'S MILLIONS

"But I do take it to heart, Peggy," said Monty seriously. "I'm pretty hard hit, and I want your help. A sister's advice is always the best in a matter of this sort."

She looked into his eyes dully for an instant, not realizing the full importance of his confession.

"You, Monty?" she said incredulously.

"I've got it bad, Peggy," he replied, staring hard at the floor. She could not understand the cold gray tone that suddenly enveloped the room. The strange sense of loneliness that came over her was inexplicable. The little something that rose in her throat would not be dislodged, nor could she throw off the weight that seemed pressing down upon her. He saw the odd look in her eyes and the drawn, uncertain smile on her lips, but he attributed them to wonder and incredulity. Somehow after all these years he was transformed before her very eyes. She was looking upon a new personality. He was no longer Montgomery the brother, but she could not realize that and when the change crept over her. What did it all mean? "I am very glad if it will make you happy, Monty," she said slowly, the gray in her lips giving way to red once more. "Does she know?"

"I haven't told her in so many words, Peggy, but—but I'm going to this evening," he announced lamely.

"This evening?"

"I can't wait," Monty said as he rose to go. "I'm glad you're pleased, Peggy. I need your good wishes. And, Peggy," he continued, with a touch of boyish wistfulness, "do you think there's a chance for a fellow? I've had the very silence of a time over that Englishman."

It was not quite easy for her to say: "Monty, you are the best in the world. Go in and win."

From the window she watched him swing off down the street, wondering if he would turn to wave his hand to her his custom for years. But the head back was straight and uncompromising. His long strides carried him swiftly out of sight, but it was many minutes before she turned her eyes, which were smarting, a little from the point where he was lost in the mist. The room looked ashen to her as she brought her mind back to it and somehow things had grown different.

When Montgomery reached home he found the telegram from Mr. Jones:

Montgomery Brewster, New York City:

Stick to your knitting, you fool.

S. JONES.

CHAPTER IN.

IT is best not to repeat the expressions Brewster used regarding one S. Jones after reading this telegram. But he felt considerably relieved after he had uttered them. He fell to reading accounts of the big game in which he was to take part in a few hours that evening, and he revelled in the descriptions of "upper cuts" and "left hooks" and learned incidentally that the affair was to be quite a go indeed. A big gamecock of a boy was a champion. Quick to see an opportunity and nerving himself into the belief that Sweerengen Jones could not possibly be such a dub of sports as he pictured him, Brewster made Harrison buy several pool coupons on the result. He satisfied that he had a chance to win a good many thousands, and his favorite would lose. Harrison soon placed sixteen on his mark. The gamey financier felt so sure of the affair that he entered the bets on the profit side of his ledger the moment he received Harrison's report.

This done, he telephoned to Miss Drew, and was overjoyed at the acceptance of his inquiry if she would go to that afternoon. She had observed in him of late a nervous restlessness, unaccompanied by nervousness and exceptional periods of irascibility, a thing of whose occupation in life is the study of men in relation to their surroundings and knows how to treat them. Barbara had dealt with many men afflicted in this manner, and the failure of anticipation that came with the appointed hour was not unfamiliar to her experience. It had something of joy in it, for she cared enough for Montgomery Brewster to be annoyed at her fanciful uncertain of his state of mind. She cared, indeed, much more than she intended to confess at the outset.

It was nearly half past 5 when he came, and for once the philosophical Miss Drew felt a little irritation. Certain was she of his object in coming that his tardiness was a trifle ruffling. He apologized for being late and succeeded in banishing the plaint that possessed her. It was naturally impossible for him to share all his secrets with her, and that is why he did not tell her right away. Finally he had called him up to report the receipt of a telegram from Sweerengen Jones, in which the gentleman's attitude could be could feed the whole state of Montana for less than $6,000. Beyond that there was no comment. Brewster in dire trepidation hastened to the office of his attorneys. They smiled when he burst in upon them.

"Good heavens!" he exclaimed. "Does the miserly old hayseed expect me to spend a million for newspapers, cigarettes and Boston terriers? I thought he would be reasonable!"

"He evidently has seen the newspaper accounts of your dinner, and this is merely his comment," said Mr. Ripley.

"It's either a warning or else he's ambiguous in his compliments," growled Brewster disgustedly.

"I don't believe he disapproved, Mr. Brewster, in the west the old gentleman is widely known as a wit."

"A wit, eh? Then he'll appreciate an answer from me. Have you a telegraph blank, Mr. Grant?"

Two minutes later the following telegram to Sweerengen Jones was awaiting the arrival of a messenger boy and Brewster was blandly assuring Messrs. Grant & Ripley that he did not care a rap for the consequences:

New York, Oct. 23, 1—

Sweerengen Jones, Butte, Mont.:

No doubt you could do it for less than six thousand. Montana is regarded as the best grazing country in the world, but we don't eat that sort of stuff in New York. That's why it costs more to live here.

MONTGOMERY BREWSTER.

Just before leaving his apartments for Miss Drew's home he received this response from faraway Montana:

Butte, Mont., Oct. 23, 1—

Montgomery Brewster, New York:

We are 3,000 feet above the level of the sea. I suppose that's why it costs us less to live high.

S. JONES.

"I was beginning to despair, Monty," said Miss Drew reproachfully when he had come down from the height of his exasperation and remembered that there were things of more importance.

The light in his eyes brought the faintest tinge of red to her cheeks, and where a moment before there had been annoyance there was now a feeling of serenity. For a moment the silence was fraught with purpose. Monty glanced around the room, uncertain how to begin. It was not so easy as he had imagined.

"You are very good to see me," he said at last. "It was absolutely necessary for me to talk to you this evening. I could not have waited another day any longer, Barbara. I've spent three or four sleepless nights on your account. Will it spoil your evening if I tell you in plain words what you already know? It won't bother you, will it?" he floundered.

"What do you mean, Monty?" she began, thoroughly at sea and with wonderful control of her eyes.

"I love you, Barbara," he cried. "I thought you had a hint about it all along, and I didn't have cold nerve before. That's why I haven't said. The fear that you may not consider me his driver, and to be candid, I'm not good enough to go on any longer. I must have to-day."

There was a gleam in his eyes that made her sure of indifference difficult. The fervor of his half whispered words took possession of her. She had expected something of such a different character that his frank confession disarmed her completely. Beneath his ardent, abrupt plea there was assurance, the confidence of one who is not to be denied. It was not what he had said, but the way he had said it. A wave of exultation swept over her, tingling through every nerve. Under the spell her resolution to dally lightly with his emotion suffered a check that almost brought tears to her eyes. Her hands were clasped in his when he exultingly resumed the charge against her heart, but she was rapidly regaining control of her emotions, and he did not know that he was losing ground with each step he took forward. Barbara Drew loved Brewster, but she was going to make him pay dearly for the brief lapse her composure had experienced. When next she spoke she was again the Miss Drew who had been trained in the ways of the world, and not the young girl in love.

"I care for you a great deal, Monty," she said, "but I'm wondering whether I care enough to—to marry you."

"We haven't known each other very long, Barbara," he pleaded, "but I think we know each other well enough to be beyond wondering."

"It is like you to manage the whole thing," she said childishly. "Can't you give me time to convince myself that I love you as you would like and as I must love if I expect to be happy with the man I marry?"

"I forgot myself," he said humbly.

"You forgot me," she protested gently, touched by this sign of contrition. "I do care for you, Monty, but don't you see it's no little thing you ask of me? I must be sure—very sure—before I—before"—

"Don't be so distressed," he pleaded. "You will love me, I know, because you love me now. It means more to me, you are the woman, and you are the one whose happiness should be considered. I can live only in the hope that when I come to you again with this same story and this same question you'll not be afraid to trust yourself to me."

"You deserve to be happy for that, Monty," she said earnestly, and it was with difficulty that she kept her eyes from wavering as they looked into his.

"You will let me try to make you love me?" he asked eagerly.

"I may not be worth the struggle."

"I'll take that chance," he replied.

She was conscious of disappointment after he was gone. He had not pleaded as ardently as she had expected and desired, and, try as she would, she could not banish the touch of irritation that had come to haunt her for the night.

Brewster walked to the club, elated that he had at least made a beginning. His position was now clear. Besides losing a fortune he must win Barbara in open competition.

At the theater that evening he met Harrison, who was in a state of jubilation.

"Where did you get that tip?" asked he.

"Tip? What tip?" from Brewster.

"On the prize fight."

Brewster's face fell, and something cold crept over him.

"How did—what was the result?" he asked, sure of the answer.

"Haven't you heard? Your man knocked him out in the fifth round—surprised everybody."

CHAPTER X.

THE next two months were busy ones for Brewster. Miss Drew saw him quite as often as before the important interview, but he was always a puzzle to her.

"His attitude is changed somehow," she thought to herself. And then she remembered that "a man who wins a girl after an ardent suit is often like one who runs after a street car and then sits down to read his paper."

In truth, after the first few days Monty seemed to have forgotten his competitors and was resting in the consciousness of his assured position. Each day he sent her flowers and considered that he had more than done his duty. He used no small part of his income on the flowers, but in this case his mission was almost forgotten in his love for Barbara.

Monty's attitude was not due to any waning of his affection, but to the very unromantic business in which he was engaged. It seemed to him that, to win as he might, he could not devise fresh ways and means to earn $16,000 a day. He was still comfortably ahead in the race, but a famine in opportunities was not far remote. Ten big dinner parties and a string of elaborate after the play suppers maintained a fair but insufficient average, and he could see that the time was ripe for ruthless measures. He could not go on forever with his dinners and suppers already beginning to refer to the fact that he was warming his toes on the social register, and he had no desire to become the laughingstock of the town. The few slighting, sarcastic remarks about his business ability, chiefly by women and therefore reflected from the men, hurt him. Miss Drew, apparently harmless taunt and Mrs. Dan's open criticism told plainly enough how the wind was blowing, but it was Peggy's good-natured chaff that cut the deepest. There was such honest concern in her voice that he could see how his profligacy was troubling her and Mrs. Grey. In their eyes more than in the others he felt ashamed and humiliated. Finally, goaded by the remark of a bank director which he overheard, "Edwin P. Brewster is turning hand-prings in his grave over the way he is going it," Monty resolved to relieve himself in the eyes of his critics. He would show them that his brain was not wholly given over to frivolity.

With this project in mind he decided to enter a little excitement in Wall street. For some days he stealthily watched the stock market and piled his desk with quotations about values. Constant reading and observation finally convinced him that Lumber and Fuel Common was the one stock in which he could safely plunge. Resisting aside all apprehension, so far as Sweerengen Jones was concerned, he prepared for what was to be his own and only venture on the Stock Exchange before the 23d of the following September. With all the cunning and craftiness of a general he had his plans for the attack. Gardner's face was the picture of despair when Brewster asked him to buy heavily in Lumber and Fuel.

"Good heavens, Monty!" cried the broker. "You're joking. Lumber is away up now. It can't possibly go a fraction of a point higher. Take my advice and don't touch it. It closed today at 113½ and closed at 109. Why, man, you're crazy to think about it for an instant."

"I know my business, Gardner," said Brewster quietly, and his conscience smote him when he saw the flush of mortification creep into the face of his friend. The rebuke had cut Gardner to the quick.

"But, Monty, I know what I'm talking about. I wouldn't tell you something about this stock," pleaded Elon loyally despite the wound.

"Gardy, I've gone into this thing carefully, and if ever a man felt sure about anything I do about this," said Monty decidedly, but affectionately.

"Take my word for it, Lumber can't go any higher. Think of the situation. The lumbermen in the north and west are overstocked, and there is a strike ready to go into effect. When that comes, the stock will go for a song. The slump is liable to begin any day."

"My mind is made up," said the other firmly, and Gardner was in despair. "Will you or will you not execute an order for me at the opening tomorrow? I'll start with 10,000 shares. What will it cost me to margin it for ten points?"

"At least a hundred thousand, exclusive of commission, which would be twelve and a half a hundred shares." Despite the most strenuous opposition from Gardner, Brewster adhered to his design, and the broker executed the order the next morning. He knew that Brewster had but one chance to win, and that was to buy the stock in a lump instead of distributing it among several brokers and throughout the session. This was a point that Monty had overlooked.

There had been little to excite the Stock Exchange for some weeks; nothing was active, and the slightest flurry was hailed as an event. Every one knew that the calm would be disturbed at some near day, but nobody looked for a sensation in Lumber and Fuel. It was a foregone conclusion that a slump was coming, and there was scarcely any trading in the stock. When Elon Gardner, acting for Montgomery Brewster, took 10,000 shares at 108½, there was a mighty gasp on the exchange, then a rubbing of eyes, then commotion. Astonishment was followed by nervousness, and then came the struggle.

Brewster, confident that the stock could go no higher and that sooner or later it must drop, calmly ordered his horse for a ride in the snow covered park. Even though he knew the venture was to be a failure in the ordinary sense, he found joy in the knowledge that he was doing something. He might be a fool; he was at least no longer inactive. The feel of the air was good to him. He was exhilarated by the glitter of the snow, the sweeping curves and clement of his horse, the gayety and sparkle of life about him.

Somewhere far back in his inner self there seemed to be the sound of cheering and the clapping of hands. Shortly before noon he reached his club, where he was to lunch with Colonel Drew. In the reading room he observed that men were looking at him in a manner less casual than was customary. Some of them went so far as to smile encouragingly, and others waved their hands in the most cordial fashion. Three or four very young members toiled upon him with admiration and envy, and even the porters seemed more obsequious. There was something strangely oppressive in all this show of deference.

Colonel Drew's dignity relaxed amazingly when he caught sight of the young man. He came forward to meet him, and his greeting almost carried Monty off his feet.

"How did you do it, my boy?" cried the colonel. "She's off a point or two now, I believe, but half an hour ago she was booming. Gad, I never heard of anything more spectacular."

Monty's heart was in his mouth as he rushed over to the ticker. It did not take him long to grasp the immensity of the disaster. Gardner had bought in at 108½, and that very action seemed to put new life into the stock. Just as it was on the point of breaking for lack of support along came this sensational order for 10,000 shares, and there could be but one result. At the time in the morning Lumber and Fuel, traded in by excited holders, touched 113½ and seemed in a fair way to hold firm around that figure.

Other men came up and listened eagerly. Brewster realized that his dash in Lumber and Fuel had been a master stroke of cleverness when considered from the point of view of these men, but a catastrophe from his own.

"I hope you sold it when it was at the top," said the colonel anxiously.

"I instructed Gardner to sell only when I gave the word," said Monty lamely. Several of the men looked at him in surprise and disgust.

"Well, if I were you I'd tell him to sell," remarked the colonel coldly.

"The effect of your dinner has worn off, Brewster, and the other side will drive the prices down. They won't be caught napping again either," said one of the bystanders earnestly.

"Do you think so?" And there was a note of relief in Monty's voice.

From all sides came the advice to sell at once, but Brewster was not to be pushed. He calmly lighted a cigarette and with an assured air of wisdom told them to wait a little while and see.

"She's already falling off," said some one at the ticker.

When Brewster's bewildered eyes raced over the figures the stock was quoted at 112. His sigh of relief was audible, but misunderstood. He might be saved after all. The stock had started to go down, and there seemed no reason why it should stop. As he intended to purchase no more, it was fair to assume that the backbone was at the breaking point. The crash was bound to come. He could hardly restrain a cry of joy. Even while he stood at the ticker the little instrument began to tell of a further decline, as the price went down his hopes went up.

The bystanders were beginning to be disgusted. "It was only a dollar after all," they said to each other. Colonel Drew was appealed to to urge Monty to save himself, and he was on the point of communicating the message came that the threatened strike was off and that the men were willing to arbitrate. Almost before one could draw breath this startling news began to make itself felt. The certainty of a great strike was one of the things that had made Gardner declare that Lumber could not hold. With this danger removed there was nothing to jeopardize the earning power of the stock. The next quotation was a point higher.

"Sly old dog!" said the colonel, digging Monty in the side. "I had confidence in you all the time."

In ten minutes' time Lumber and Fuel was again up to 113 and soaring. Brewster, panic stricken, rushed to the telephone and called up Gardner.

The broker, hoarse with excitement, was delighted when he recognized Brewster's voice.

"You're a wonder, Monty! I'll see you after the close. How did you do it?" shouted Gardner.

"What's the price now?" asked Brewster.

"One thirteen and three-fourths and going up all the time! Hooray!"

"Do you think she'll go down again?" demanded Brewster.

"Not if I can help it."

"Very well, then, go and sell out!" roared Brewster.

"But she's going up like"—

"Sell, hang you! Didn't you hear?" Gardner, dazed and weak, began selling, and finally finished the full line at prices ranging from 114 to 112¾. But Montgomery Brewster had cleared $58,550, and all because it was he and not the market that got excited.

CHAPTER XI.

IT was not that he had realized heavily in the transactions which ran counter his friends and his enemies to regard him in a new light. His profit had been quite small as things go in Wall street, but there was fun for despair over the acquisition of $58,000. It made it necessary for him to undertake an almost stupendous task—the squandering of his January bills. The plans for the ensuing spring and summer were dimly getting into shape, and they called for many startling projects. Since confiding some of them to Nopper Harrison the gentleman had worn a never decreasing look of worry and anxiety on his face.

Rawles added to his despair a day or two after the Stock Exchange misdeed time. He brought up the information that six dependent relatives had come to bless his Boston terrier family, and Joe Braglon, who was present, enthusiastically predicted that he could get $100 apiece for them. Brewster loved dogs, yet for one single horrible moment he longed to massacre the helpless little creatures. But the old affection came back to him, and he hurried out with Braglon to inspect the brood.

"And I've either got to sell them or kill them," he groaned. Later on he instructed Braglon to sell the pups for $25 apiece and went away, ashamed to look their mother in the face for a time.

Fortune smiled on him before the day was over, however. He took Subway Smith for a ride in the "green one" and gave him a beating and had roads notwithstanding. Monty lost control of the machine and headed for a subway excavation. Both men deftly saved themselves by leaping to the pavement, sustaining slight bruises, but the great machine crashed through the barricade and dropped to the bottom of the trench far below. To Smith's grief and Brewster's delight the automobile was hopelessly ruined, a clear loss of many thousands. Monty's joy was short lived, for it was soon learned that three luckless workmen down in the depths had been killed by injured by the green meteor from above. The mere fact that Brewster could and did pay liberally for the relief of the poor fellows afforded him little consolation. His carelessness and possibly his indifference had brought suffering to these men and their families, which was not pleasant to look back upon. Lawsuits were avoided by compromise. Each of the injured men received $4,000.

His greeting almost carried Monty off his feet.

STELLA.

During the week another little union has come to us. We may expect it as a settled fact at most any time now.

The Stella is only to make her daily trips until the end of December. For the past few years she has made Saturday trips to Gravenhurst to accommodate the Islanders, but owing to the dock for repairs this year, so here is a chance for the Wolfe Islander or any other boat of capacity to enterprise. It would also pay the merchants of Kingston to see that those trips are made in some way as they know from past experience the profit there is in such visitors at that season.

Mrs. A. McCarthur, of Bath, spent a few days here with her sister, Miss M. Hill.

MARTIN—MARTIN.

The home of Mr. Melbourne Martin, John st., was the scene of a very happy event, on Wednesday evening, Nov. 22nd, when his eldest daughter, Carrie Alberta, was united in marriage to Mr. Bruce L. Martin, eldest son of the late Sidney Martin, of Switzerville. The ceremony was performed by Rev. M. J. Bates, of Hancroft, uncle of the groom, in the presence of the immediate relatives and friends of the contracting parties. At 6 o'clock the happy party entered the drawing room, the bride leaning on her father's arm, and preceded by her sister, Miss Annie Martin, while Mr. Harold Martin, of Tamworth, brother of the groom, performed the duties of best man. And the little ring-bearer, Miss Marian Brush, of Yarker, in white silk and lace, played her part as lovely as very gracefully. The bride was very becomingly attired in white silk colienne, while the bridesmaid wore a dress of pale blue silk colienne, each making a pretty appearance standing under a beautiful arch of evergreens. After the ceremony and hearty congratulations had required to the dining room, where was found every delicacy to tempt the appetite and satisfy the most fastidious. The numerous presents were both costly and useful, that of the groom to his bride being a brooch of pearls, to the bridesmaid, and little maid of honor gold bracelets and lockets. The happy couple took the midnight train for Montreal where they will be entertained at the home of Mrs. R. D. Martin for a few days, followed by the best wishes of their many friends for a happy future. On returning they will be pleased to be at home in Switzerville, to their friends on December 9th and 10th, afternoon and evening.

ARDEN.

On Tuesday evening, 14th inst., a public temperance meeting was held in the Methodist church, under the auspices of the District Lodge of Good Templars for North Addington and North Frontenac. The chair was occupied by the District Chief Templar, Mr. Wesley Camp. All the speakers of the evening were Rev. W. S. Smart, of Mountain Grove, Mr. Joseph Foster, Moscow, License Commissioner for Addington, and the pastor, Rev. A. C. Huffman. Mr. Foster's address was especially interesting, forceful and convincing, coming as it did from one who was in a position to state facts, from actual experience. The people of Arden will be glad to hear Mr. Foster again.

A GOOD ROADS REPORT

Wherever in Ontario the country roads have been constructed in an up-to-date manner, declares the annual report of Mr. A. W. Campbell, the provincial commissioner of highways, one of the most startling benefits at once apparent to the users has been the greatly increased loads that can be drawn. The efficiency of good roads as a factor in transportation, and in comparison with railways, tending to a reduction of freight rates, it is added, is a matter of marked importance to all agricultural interests. A little experience, it is contended, will show that the people of Ontario in improved common roads have a most valuable means of securing fair railway tariffs. While in some ways these improvements seem strong and, perhaps, calculated to lead people into expecting too much from their outlay in the good road movement, there is no question either from the view point of theory or experience that good roads are a good investment for the community which feels itself able to provide them. And a good road is not necessarily a costly one. To quote Mr. Campbell's report, it is one "best answering to a broad sense the requirements of economic traffic. Money spent on road construction is an investment from which adequate returns are to be expected. A road the cost of which is excessively great in proportion to the use made of it, however much the hard, easily travelled desirable may be far from being a good road. On the other hand a common dirt road if it is made and maintained so as to properly meet the needs of traffic may be a good road indeed. Canada, therefore, we do not need English, French or Roman roads; but we do want Canadian roads, each mile adapted to local requirements and conditions.

LOVELY WEATHER IN MANITOBA.

Elkhorn, Man.,
Nov. 19th, 1905.

Editor of The Beaver,
Napanee, Ont.

DEAR SIR.—As I have leisure time I thought that I would give you a few particulars about our country. To-day is like a day in May—so warm, bright and refreshing. While you have been having snow down there, we are having rain. Buggies are still going and windows and doors are often left open. The farmers are ploughing late yet, and from general appearance may keep at it for the rest of this month. The leaves of the trees are budding out and I notice some buds that have been picked. Such weather in November was never seen before in Manitoba.

Elkhorn is about two hundred miles Winnipeg, near the boundary of Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

Wishing The Beaver every success, I remain,
Yours truly,
E. M. McKIM.

OBITUARY.

On Sunday last Mr. John L. Ferguson, a highly esteemed resident of Deseronto, was called from earth to his final reward. Deceased was born in Prince Edward county, near West Lake, and lived there for some years after he grew to manhood. Later he moved to Picton and spent several years in the mercantile business. Afterwards he engaged in farming on the high shore, removing to Deseronto some twenty years ago, where he spent the later years of his life. Mr. Ferguson was a consistent member of the Methodist church, and took delight in church work. His last illness was short, about three weeks ago he being taken down with a severe attack of bronchitis, and although everything was done that skilful physicians and kind friends could do, he continued to sink, until death came to his relief. A widow, daughter of the late David Parks, Hay Bay, and one daughter, Mrs. W. J. Bowen, Deseronto, and a large circle of relatives and acquaintances mourn the loss of a kind and faithful husband, an indulgent father and a faithful friend. In his death the church has lost a faithful member, and Deseronto a good citizen. The funeral service took place at the Methodist church, Deseronto, on Tuesday last, when an impressive discourse was delivered by Rev. Mr. Strike, from the words, "The memory of the just is blessed." A large concourse of friends followed the remains to the cemetery where the burial service was read by the I.O.F. was read over the remains, which were then consigned to its last resting place to await the resurrection morn.

THE PULPIT AND PEW

HELPERS OF MINISTER OF GOD DESCRIBED BY DR. TALMAGE.

SERMON OF ENCOURAGEMENT

Church Work Cannot Be All Done by One Man—Paul Could Not Do It—He Had His Helpers In Urbane and Stachys — They Co-operated With Apostle—So Must Pew Co-operate With Pulpit.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1905, by Frederick Dixey, of Toronto, at the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Nov. 19.—For the old folks, the young folks, the influential and the humble, there are words of cheer and congratulation in this sermon, as well as encouragement in well doing. The text is Romans xvi., 9, "Salute Urbane, our helper in Christ, and Stachys, my beloved."

How many ever wondered over any of the great battlefields of the world? Have you ever had a guide lead you over the blood-soaked soil of Gettysburg? Then you have been struck with the fact that no one squad, no one company, no one regiment, no one brigade, no one division alone fought that battle. The success of Gen. George G. Meade or of Hooker, R. Lee depended not more upon their generals being faithful than upon all the colonels and major and captains and sergeants and corporals and private soldiers being faithful and working together and in unison. The difference between a conquering army and a mob is the difference between men working together in an intelligent way to achieve a desired purpose and a conglomerate collection of individuals, each claiming that his own will is the equal, if not the superior, of all the other wills and intelligences about him.

What is true of the army is absolutely true in reference to business. How is the Panama canal to be dug? Is it the United States commissioners appointed by the President? By the chief engineer? By the contractors? Oh, no. As in the monthly establishment, the buyers, the advertising agents, the floorwalkers, the salesmen, the delivery wagons, all work together in unison and each as a cooperative agent helps the other, so in the Panama canal all the different departments are working together. Each man is helped by some other man, and each tries to help the other men. Now, what is true in the army and in the business and in the steamship here is also true of the church in regard to church work. Here we do not find the minister himself doing all the work. Paul, John and Peter did not do it. He had his helpers, his associate workers. He himself tells us that he was but a laborer together with God in God's work. Neither can the lay church members make a success for the kingdom of God unless they co-operate with the pulpit. Thus the purpose of my sermon today is to show you who the men and the women were upon whom Paul could rely in his work and whose work he could rely upon in his work. I speak the more earnestly in this matter because I have been receiving letters from all parts of the country, written by young ministers, asking what course they should take in the ministry. Without the minister's help the church members can accomplish but little, and without the church members the minister can accomplish but little. So I am to speak to you today in the first place of the helpers of the minister, and then in the second place of the helpers of the church members. Now, I am to speak of the helpers of the minister, and I am to speak of them as they are mentioned in the text. Paul says, "Salute Urbane, our helper in Christ." Urbane was a Roman. He was a man of culture, of refinement, of education. He was a man of wealth. He was a man of social position. He was a man of influence. He was a man of power. He was a man of prominence. He was a man of high standing. He was a man of great ability. He was a man of great usefulness. He was a man of great piety. He was a man of great devotion. He was a man of great consecration. He was a man of great zeal. He was a man of great energy. He was a man of great perseverance. He was a man of great courage. He was a man of great faith. He was a man of great hope. He was a man of great liberality. He was a man of great hospitality. He was a man of great sociability. He was a man of great affability. He was a man of great courtesy. He was a man of great politeness. He was a man of great refinement. He was a man of great culture. He was a man of great education. He was a man of great learning. He was a man of great wisdom. He was a man of great knowledge. He was a man of great understanding. He was a man of great judgment. He was a man of great discretion. He was a man of great prudence. He was a man of great foresight. He was a man of great vision. He was a man of great imagination. He was a man of great creativity. He was a man of great originality. He was a man of great ingenuity. He was a man of great resourcefulness. He was a man of great inventiveness. He was a man of great skill. He was a man of great dexterity. He was a man of great craftsmanship. He was a man of great artistry. He was a man of great beauty. He was a man of great grace. He was a man of great elegance. He was a man of great refinement. He was a man of great sophistication. Certainly do appeal to the economical man.
They burn up LESS fuel for the HEAT THEY GIVE OUT, than any other furnace in Canada.
Two or three tons LESS every winter, is the usual saving.
That means $10 to $15, a year.
And HECLA Furnaces are built for service as well as economy.
Quick fire—powerful drafts—smokeproof, gasproof, because the joints are PUSHED into one solid piece, not bolted or cemented together.
"HECLA" burns hard and soft coal, coke and wood equally well.
Stop in and let us show you all the special features of the best furnace made in Canada.

Would you call the young doctor who last year graduated at the head of his medical class, brilliant, bound to be right? No. You would send for such a man as Dr. Hamilton, who stood at the head of James J. Collections of voices are being made for various purposes. The phonograms of the British museum are designed to preserve for future generations the voices of famous people of the time; but the Vienna Academy of Sciences is going further and securing specimens of languages. Already a collection includes popular songs of Greece and Arabian, favorite airs of Red Indian tribes, the idioms of Negroes and Malays, and so on. Besides sending out special voice-hunting expeditions every year, and its agents now scouring Australasia, Rou mania, Persia, and other countries, the plan is to photograph the voices as well as record sounds.

Of the world's most interesting mammals none have been more successful in attracting attention than the great striated paints out that the Indian neighborhood fact of the Indian buffalo, which was occasionally met with fifty or sixty years ago, is now known. The other American bison is the wolf or the Falkland Islands, a type of considerable importance, which seems to have been exterminated by strychnine about thirty years ago.

They know from experience its value as a curative. Try it.

Pain is a Punishment.—Pain is a protest of nature against neglect of the bodily health, and that carelessness of regarding the physical condition. It speaks in at the first opportunity and takes up its abode in a man and it is sometimes difficult to expel it. Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil will drive it out in short order. Pain cannot abide where it is used, but immediately flees away.

"Why don't you get up a new, give that seat to your father, Bobby?" suggested the lady. "Doesn't it pain you to see him reaching for a strap?" "Not on a street car," chuckled Bobby. "He can't gain much ter him reaching for a strap at home."

There was an arbitration and Justice Meredith decided in favor of the government. The strangest funeral services ever recorded occurred at the plant of the Midvale Steel Works Saturday. November 18th John Forkin and Joseph Gibbons were engulfed in 82,000 pounds of molten steel flowing from a 24,000 furnace into a pit where they toiled. In the flash of an eye not a vestige of the two men was left and scarcely a puff of smoke arose to indicate their terrible incineration. In deference to the feelings of the employees and to spare families the company will bury the 8,000 pounds of steel, supposed to contain part of the mass into which it is thought the bodies were absorbed, with all the formalities usually attending an ordinary funeral.

MISERABLE NIGHTS.

Nothing so demoralizes an infant and enslaves the parents as to take a cross or wakeful baby from the bed and walk him up and down the floor during the night. The baby cries because it is not well — generally because the stomach is sour, its little bowels congested and its skin hot and feverish. Relieve this and baby will sleep soundly all night, growing fat, happy and better every day. For what mothers need to keep baby healthy and smart is Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, which cures all stomach, bowel and teething troubles and thus promotes natural health-giving sleep. Mrs. Wm. Holmes, Dacre, Ont., says, "My baby was troubled with sour stomach and was constipated most of the time, and was always cross and restless. I gave him Baby's Own Tablets and found them a complete success and would not now be without them. You can get Baby's Own Tablets from any druggist, or by mail at 25 cents a box by writing the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

DO YOU OFTEN LAUGH?

If You Do Not You Are Making A Grave Mistake.

Don't forget to laugh. Laugh when you are happy; laugh when you are amused; laugh at yourself for being human. There is always something to laugh at, and even when one is reduced to laughing at one self that is better than to be "glum."

This is what laughter does for a woman: It keeps her heart young; it makes her like people for the sake of the pleasure they give her; and they in turn like her; it makes her steps buoyant; it keeps her face from wrinkling; it is a beautifier second to no other one; it does for the muscles of the face what exercise does for those of the body—keeps them supple and prevents them from falling into those stiff and settled lines which mean old age.

There is no situation in life, except, of course, the inevitable tragic moments, that may not be bettered by laughter. It is hard to burlesque one's griefs and annoyances, but it can be done, and it is worth the effort.

To travesty one's emotions and to make a mockery of one's annoyances, may not seem the highest form of philosophy, but it is not so low a one as to fret over and grow pessimistic over personal woes.

THE BETTER SIDE

The churches have now entered upon their fall and winter work, and not a few clergy have used as a text the sermons exhortations, and in this they have done but their duty. At the same time, they should not overlook the other and brighter side of the picture. The large congregations that sit before them Sunday after Sunday testify well enough to the love of clean and honest lives; they tell of happy homes and firesides; they tell of prosperity and contented homes; they tell of high standards in the preachers' choice of purpose; they tell of faith in a religion which puts and keeps under the ban all that is unworthy, all that is dishonorable, all that is unworthy. In spite of the year's record of wrong and of evil, the year's record of good, of good will redound to the credit of the country, but it is the duty of the church to increase the labors of the few, to make that record even better in the years that are to come — Baltimore American.

BIGGEST BIRD THAT FLIES

Is the condor the biggest bird that flies? What is the heaviest and capable of flight is bustard—a table reference says it weighs from twenty-five to thirty pounds and has an expanse of wing, a trifle less than that of a wild swan, is three or four feet less than that of the famous albatross, and only half that of the largest condor on record.

In point of size the giant albatross of the Southern Ocean, with an average expanse of eleven feet four inches, has to yield to the condor of Chile, whose extended pinions are known to measure twelve feet, and in one instance, cited by a 'Field' writer, on good authority, to have reached the width of fifteen feet. It would seem that the condor of the Andes is still lord of the air by one foot.

HOW TO GET CONSUMPTION.

Ninety per cent. of the "lungers" contract consumption by allowing powers of resistance to fall so low that a favorable condition for the development of the tuccilli is provided.

Healthy system consumption can't take root. But where there is weakness and debility there you find tuberculosis. For developing strength and building up the weak nothing equals Ferrozone. It makes the blood nutritious and the system vigorous. The way it converts food into nutriment, the appetite it creates, the refreshing rest that the man verging on consumption needs—that's Ferrozone's summation. Weak, don't put off. Fifty cents buys a box of fifty tablets—at all dealers.

SEAWATER CURE.

The medical world has been startled by the results obtained by Drs. Robert Simon and Rene Quinton, of Paris, with salt water as a cure for tuberculosis. The treatment consists of hypodermic injections of sea water, which has been diluted with spring water and the mixture sterilized by cold.

Hypodermic injections of this liquid are given the patient every three or four days in doses of fifty to 200 cubic centimetres. The improvement in the patient's condition is rapidly manifested by an increase in weight, better appetite, calmer sleep, less coughing and a clearer speaking voice.

Of the eighteen patients under treatment at present, Drs. Simon and Quinton have every hope of fifteen cures.

A "TRUTHFUL" BEAR STORY.

An exciting time was experienced by two gentlemen from the Craig mine, near Bannockburn, one day last week. One of the hunters got on track of a bear and traced it until nightfall, when he gave up the chase in order to secure some rest. The next morning in company with a friend, he started on the trail again and had only gone a very short distance when they came upon a bear's hole. One of them poked a stick with a stick and in a shorter time than it takes to tell Mr. Bruin came forth. Both hunters had winchesters and opened fire. The old chap, like "Russia", stood the onslaught pretty well, but finally gave up the battle after the unlucky (for him) number of thirteen shots had been fired into him. The bear was a monster, weighing 400 pounds and was thought to be about twenty years old. We would inform our readers that this is not the proverbial "bear story," as the gentleman from whom the information was secured is noted for truth.

Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women

Medicines, sold alike for men and women, never contain what will do a woman the most good, that is, the uterine and other female tonics. Such medicines are relievers for a little but that is all.

They do not cure, because they do not reach the cause of nine-tenths of the ills of women.

Women need a remedy compounded for their special needs. Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women are such a medicine.

They are a special remedy compounded by a specialist for a special purpose. The specialist is Dr. Hugo, of Paris, who perhaps knows more about the needs of women to-day than any other living physician. Their special purpose is to cure the ills of women and them alone. They are not for men.

Are Just for Women.

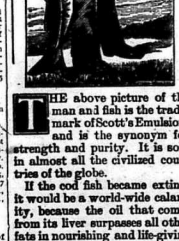
Elizabeth M. Thompson was born in Bath, Ont., August 28th, 1825, and died at her son's home near the Eg, West, November, 13th, 1905, in her eighty-first year. In 1851 she was united in marriage with John R. She was a consistent member of the Baptist church.



THE above picture of the man and fish is the trade-mark of Scott's Emulsion, and is the synonym for strength and purity. It is sold in almost all the civilized countries of the globe.

If the cod fish became extinct it would be a world-wide calamity, because the oil that comes from its liver surpasses all other fats in nourishing and life-giving properties. Thirty years ago the proprietors of Scott's Emulsion found a way of preparing cod liver oil so that everyone can take it and get the full value of the oil without the objectionable taste. Scott's Emulsion is the best thing in the world for weak, backward children, thin, delicate people, and all conditions of wasting and lost strength.

PUBLIC WARNING.

The Family Herald and Weekly Star of Montreal this week warns the public against falling into a simple error. There is another paper in Montreal with a very similar name, but it is by no means the Family Herald and Weekly Star. When any canvasser came be sure you get the "Family Herald," the word "Family" must be used to get what you want. The Family Herald and Weekly Star is the big family and farm paper which gives that beautiful picture, "Queen Alexandra, Her Grandchildren and Dogs," which is admired by every intelligent dollar's worth. Every effort is made to please subscribers. We have also issued the Farmers' Manual and Home Doctor, which no farmer can well afford to be without. Any one desiring a sample copy of subscriptions to the Family Herald and Weekly Star; this office, or the publisher, giving the names of two persons presenting present subscribers to receive new ones, will be entitled to the picture. Any one sending $1.00 will have their beautiful pictures sent to them in the country. The picture alone is said to be worth more than two dollars, yet one may now buy the paper for a year and the picture.

SCHOOLBOY ENGLISH.

Here are some choice spec mens of English translated from the original schoolboy mind during the recent examination. Queen Elizabeth was never married. She was so fond of dancing that she had one every other one, and she was beautiful and wrote poetry and breaking. Sir Walter Raleigh Oxford were butler, eggs, cheese, bread and beer. Sir Francis Drake of Cranford was so shattered through grief that he died quite a young man. Edward the First was long old. Lord Alfred Tennyson was a celebrated poet and he wrote many beautiful poems with long hair, and Alfred the Great used to run away to his mother. Call me early, dear, for I have points to enlist. The late King. He was made a lord, he was a lord, and he wrote many songs.—London Tattler.

HAPPY FARMERS.

Kingston Whig.

A subscriber sends the Whig a few items of this year's cash income on a two-hundred-acre farm in Leeds county. If there are three young men in the family, no hired help was employed:

Season's Milk	$2,057.00
Pigs sold	150.00
Poultry	150.00
	$2,557.00

This shows over ten dollars per day for family expenses, and the statement leaves many minor items of income unmentioned.

Another subscriber sends us a future statement of cash receipts from the produce from a hundred acre farm in Leeds county. The owner of this statement also is not as complete as could be desired, but is plainly evidence of the prosperity of the Ontario farmer. While it does not explain the credit side of the account we have no doubt that at least two-thirds of the items mentioned are cash and are now on deposit in the bank. If not applied to some paying investment. His statement is:

Milk to cheese factory	$360.00
Milk to butter factory	120.00
Pigs sold	240.00
Calves sold	12.00
Cow sold	21.00
Horses sold	75.00
Corn to canning factory	130.00
Tomatoes to canning factory ...	192.00
Peas to canning factory	107.50
Apples sold	84.00
Peas, goldvines	130.00
Potatoes	48.00
Eggs	52.00
Wool	24.00
Turnips	3.00
Strawberries sold	4.00
Earned with mower and binder	21.00
	$1,570.50

Our correspondent adds that he has deducted for living expenses. As he does not add this into the total we presume he is forming a separate account. He also adds that besides having on hand his winter's supply of hay, he has also five tons of cracked peas, oats and corn, 200 bushels of oats and lots of clover to be threshed for seed, and six growing pigs.

Without experience in farm life one can have but little idea of how much or a farmer's living comes directly from the soil. He only needs to have his hand in his pocket at every turn. Everything has to be paid out for, and at present prices a farmer's living does not go very far from home.

Let the third of the cash income shown in statement as for produce furnished to canning factories, it might be well for some of our enterprising citizens to consider the establishment of a canning factory in or near Kingston.

Deafness Cannot be Cured.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness, caused by Catarrh, that we cannot cure by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

Fine Finish

The farmer manufactures beef, pork, milk, etc., and he must properly handle his live stock machinery to get the greatest and best finished production.

Just as he is careful to put oil on his harness bearings, so should he be as careful to keep his live stock machinery in good working condition.

An animal whose digestive machinery is heavily loaded needs more oil than one that isn't.

Clydesdale Stock Food

is the oil to ease the load on your animal's digestive machinery, because it increases the digestive fluids owing to the food being made "tasty."

It also makes the feeder bristle with activity and vitality, making the blood circulate better, thereby distributing the flesh more evenly over the body instead of into the stomach for fallow at 4c. per pound.

It makes the hide and coat soft and glossy, giving that "fine finish" that fetches from 25c. to 50c. per hundred more than from ordinary feeding.

Contains nothing injurious, and can stop feeding it without harmful effects.

Your money cheerfully refunded by the dealer if you are not satisfied after feeding it. Same for all Clydesdale Preparations.

BREWSTER'S MILLIONS

The fast and loose game displeased Miss Barbara greatly. She was at first surprised, then piqued, then resentful. Monty gradually awoke to the distressing fact that she was going to be intractable, as he put it, and forthwith undertook to smooth the troubled sea. To his amazement and concern, she was not to be appeased.

"Does it occur to you, Monty," she said, with a gentle coldness that was infinitely worse than heat, "that you have been carrying things with a pretty high hand? Where did you acquire the right to interfere with my privileges? You seem to think that I am not to speak to any man but you."

"Oh, come, now, Babs," retorted Monty, "I've not been quite as unreasonable as that. And you know yourself that Grimes is the worst kind of a bounder."

"I know nothing of the sort," replied the lady, with growing irritation. "You say that about every man who gives me a smile or a flower. Does it indicate such atrocious taste?"

"Don't be silly, Barbara. You know perfectly well that you have talked to Gardiner and that idiot Valentine by the hour, and I've not said a word. But there are some things I can't stand, and the impertinence of Grimes is one of them. Love! He looked at you out of those fishy eyes sometimes as though he owned you. If you knew how many times I've fairly ached to knock him down!"

Inwardly Barbara was weakening a little before his masterfulness. But she gave no sign.

"And it never occurred to you," she said, with that exasperating cold calm of voice, "that I was equal to the situation. I suppose you thought Mr. Grimes had only to beckon and I would joyfully answer. I'll have you know, Monty Brewster, right now that I am quite able to choose my friends and to handle them. Mr. Grimes has character, and I like him. He has seen more of life in a year of his strenuous career than you ever dreamed of in all your pampered existence. His life has been real, Monty Brewster, and yours is only an imitation."

It struck him hard, but it left him gentle.

"Babs," he said softly, "I can't take that from you. You don't really mean it, do you? Am I as bad as that?"

It was a moment for dominance, and he missed it. His gentleness left her cold.

"Monty," she exclaimed irritably, "you are terribly exasperating. Do make up your mind that you and your millions are not the only things in the world."

His blood was up now, but it flung him away from her.

"Some day perhaps you'll find out that there is not much besides. I am just a little too big, for one thing, to be played with and thrown aside. I won't stand it."

He left the house with his head high in the air, angry red in his cheeks and a feeling in his heart that she was the most unreasonable of women. Left there in the meantime cried herself to sleep, vowing she would never love Monty Brewster again as long as she lived.

A sharp cutting wind was blowing in Monty's face as he left the house. He was thoroughly wretched.

"Throw up your hands!" came hoarsely from somewhere, and there was no tenderness in the tones. For an instant Monty was dazed and bewildered, but in the next he saw two shadowy figures walking beside him.

"Stop where you are, young fellow," was the next command, and he stopped short. He was in a mood to fight, but the sight of a revolver made him think again. Monty was not a coward; neither was he a fool. He was quick to see that a struggle would be madness.

"Help yourselves, boys."

"What do you want?" he demanded as coolly as his nerves would permit.

"Put up your hands, quick!" And he hastily obeyed the injunction.

"Not a sound out of you or you get it good and proper. You know what we want. Get to work, Bill. I'll watch his hands."

"Help yourselves, boys. I'm not fool enough to scrap about it. Don't hit me on sheet, that's all. Be quick about it, because I'll take cold if my overcoat is open long. How's business here to-night?" Brewster was to all intents and purposes the calmest man in New York.

"Fierce!" said the one who was doing the searching. "I'm the first guy we've seen in a week that looks good."

"I hope you won't be disappointed," said Monty genially. "If I'd expected this I might have brought more money."

"I guess we'll be satisfied," chuckled the man with the revolver. "You're awful nice and kind, mister, and maybe you wouldn't object to tellin' us when you'll be up dis way ag'in."

"It's a pleasure to do business with you, pardner," said the other, dropping Monty's $300 watch in his pocket. "We'll leave car fare for you for your honesty." His hands were running through Brewster's pockets with the quickness of a machine. "You don't go much on jewelry, I guess. Are dese shoit buttons de real t'ing?"

"They're pearls," said Monty cheerfully.

"My favorite pearl," said the man with the revolver. "Clip 'em out, Bill."

"Don't cut the shirt," urged Monty. "I'm going to a little supper, and I don't like the idea of a punctured shirt front."

"I'll be careful as I kin, mister. There, I guess dat's all. Shall I call a cab for you, sir?"

"No, thank you. I think I'll walk."

"Well, just walk south a hundred steps without lookin' round er yellin' and you kin save your skin. I guess you know what I mean, pardner."

"I'm sure I do. Good night." A "Good night," came in chuckles from the two holdup men. But Brewster hesitated, a sharp thought penetrating his mind.

"By and," he exclaimed, "you chaps are very careless. Do you know you've missed a roll of $900 in this overcoat pocket?" The men paused, and the apostolic oaths that came from them were born of incredulity. It was plain that they doubted their ears.

"Say it ag'in," muttered Bill in bewildered tones.

"It's stringin' us, Bill," said the other.

"Sure," growled Bill. "It's a nice way to treat us, mister. Move along now and don't turn round."

"Well, you're a couple of nice high waymen," cried Monty in disgust.

"Sh! Not so loud."

"That is no way to attend to business. Do you expect me to go down into my pocket and hand you the goods on a silver tray?"

"Keep your hands up! You don't walk that game on me. You got a gun there."

"No, I haven't. This is on the level. You overlooked a roll of ! ils in your haste, and I'm not the sort of fellow to see an earnest endeavorer get the worst of it. My hands are up. See for yourself if I'm not telling you the truth."

"What kind of a game is dis" growled Bill, dazed and bewildered. "I'm blowed if I know w'at to t'ink o' you," cried he in honest amazement. "You don't act drunk, and you ain't crazy, but there's somethin' wrong wit you. Are you givin' it to us straight about de wad?"

"You can find out easily."

"Well, I hate to do it, boss, but I guess we'll just take de overcoat and all. It looks like a trick, and we take no chances. Off wid de coat."

Monty's coat came off in a jiffy, and he stood shivering before the dumfounded robbers.

"We'll leave de coat at de next corner, pardner. It's cold, and you need it more'n we do. You're de limit, you are. So long. Walk right straight ahead and don't yell."

Brewster found his coat a few minutes later, and he went whistling away into the night. The roll of bills was gone.

CHAPTER XII.

BREWSTER made a good story of it. One of the listeners was a new public commissioner who was aggressive in his efforts at reform. Accordingly Brewster was summoned to headquarters the next morning for the purpose of identifying the "suspects" that had been brought in. Almost the first man that he espied was a rough looking fellow whose identity could not be mistaken. It was Bill.

"Hello, Bill," called Monty gayly. Bill ground his teeth for a second, but his eyes had such an appeal in them that Monty relented.

"You know this fellow, Mr. Brewster?" demanded the captain quickly. Bill looked entreaty.

"Know Bill?" questioned Monty in surprise. "Of course I do, captain."

"He was picked up late last night and detained because he would give no account of his actions."

"Was it as bad as that, Bill?" asked Brewster, with a smile. Bill mumbled something and assumed a look of defiance. Monty's attitude puzzled him sorely. He hardly breathed for an instant and gulped perceptibly.

"Pass Bill, captain. He was with me last night just before my money was taken, and he couldn't possibly have robbed me without my knowledge. Wait for me outside, Bill. I want to talk to you. I'm quite sure neither of the thieves is here, captain," concluded Brewster after Bill had obeyed the order to step out of the line.

Outside the door the puzzled crook met Brewster, who shook him warmly by the hand.

"You're a peach," whispered Bill gratefully. "What did you do it for, mister?"

"Because you were kind enough not to cut my shirt."

"Say, you're all right, that's what. Would you mind havin' a drink with me? It's your money, but the drink won't be any the worse for that. We blowed most of it already, but here's what's left." Bill handed Monty a roll of bills.

"I'd 'a' kept it if you'd made a fight," he continued, "but it ain't square to keep it now."

Brewster refused the money, but took back his watch.

"Keep it, Bill," he said. "You need it more than I do. It's enough to set you up in some other trade. Why not try it?"

"I will try, boss." And Bill was so profuse in his thanks that Monty had difficulty in getting away. As he climbed into a cab he heard Bill say: "I will try, boss, and, say, if ever I can do anything for you jes' put me-next. I'm nex' you all de time."

He gave the driver the name of his club, but as he was passing the Waldorf he remembered that he had several things to say to Mrs. Dan. The order was changed, and a few moments later he was received in Mrs. Dan's very special den. She wore something soft and graceful in lavender, something that was light and wavy and evanescent and made one watch its changing shadows. Monty looked down at her with the feeling that she made a very effective picture.

"You are looking pretty fit this morning, my lady," he said by way of preamble. "How well everything plays up to you!"

"And you are unusually courtly, Monty," she smiled. "Has the world treated you so generously of late?"

"It is treating me generously enough just now to make up for anything," and he looked at her. "Do you know, Mrs. Dan, that it is borne in upon me now and then that there are things that are quite worth while?"

"Oh, if you come to that," she answered lightly, "everything is worth while. For you, Monty, life is certainly not slow. You can dominate; you can make things go your way. Aren't they going your way now, Monty?" Then more seriously: "What's wrong? Is the pace too fast?"

His mood increased upon him with her sympathy. "Oh, no," he said, "it isn't that. You are good, and I'm a selfish beast. Things are perverse and people are desperately obstinate sometimes. And here I'm taking it out on you. You are not perverse. You are not obstinate. You are a ripper, Mrs. Dan, and you are going to help me out in some ways then one."

"Well, to pay for all these gallantries, Monty, I ought to do much. I'm your friend though think of that now. I'm here only to command me."

"It was precisely to get your help that I came in. I'm tired of those confounded dinners. I know yourself that they are all alike—the same people, the same flowers, the same things to eat and the same inane twaddle in the shape of talk. Who cares about them anyway?"

"Well, I like that!" she interrupted. "After all the thought I put into those dinners! After all the variety I so carefully secured! My dear boy, you are frightfully ungrateful."

"Oh, you know what I mean, and I can know quite as well as I do that it is perfectly true. The dinners were a beastly bore, which proves that they were a kind success. They work was not done in vain. But now I want something else. We must push along this ball we've been talking of. And the yachting cruise—that can't wait very much longer."

"The ball first," she decreed. "I'll see to the cards at once, and in a day or two I'll have a list ready for your gracious approval. And what have you done?"

"Pettingill has some great ideas for doing over Sherry's. Harrison is in communication with the manager of that Hungarian orchestra you spoke of, and he finds the men quite ready for a little jaunt across the water. I have that military band—I've forgotten the number of its regiment—for the promenade music, and the new Paris sensation, the contralto, is coming over with her prima tenore for some special numbers."

"You were certainly cut out for an executive, Monty," said Mrs. Dan. "But with the music and the decorations arranged you're only begun. The favors are the real things, and if you say the word we'll surprise them a little. Don't worry about it, Monty. It's a go already. We'll pull it off together."

"You are a thoroughbred, Mrs. Dan," he exclaimed. "You do help a fellow at a pinch."

"That's all right, Monty," she answered. "Give me until after Christmas and I'll have the finest favors ever seen. Other people may have their paper hats and pink ribbons, but

Her reference to Christmas haunted Brewster as he drove down Fifth avenue with the dread of a new disaster. Never before had he looked upon presents as a calamity, but this year it was different. Immediately he began to plan a bombardment of his friends with costly trinkets, when he grew suddenly doubtful of the opinion of his uncle's executor upon this move. But in response to a telegram Swearengen Jones, with pleasing tractibility, informed him that "any one with a drop of human kindness in his body would consider it his duty to give Christmas presents to those who deserved them." Monty's way was now clear. If his friends meant to handicap him with gifts he knew a way to get even. For two weeks his mornings were spent at Tiffany's, and the afternoons brought joy to the heart of every dealer in antiquities in Fourth and Fifth avenues. He gave much thought to the matter in the effort to secure many small articles which elsewhere concealed their value. And he had taste. The result of his endeavor was that many friends who would not have thought of remembering Monty with even a card were pleasantly surprised on Christmas eve.

As it turned out, he fared very well in the matter of gifts, and for some days much of his time was spent in reading notes of profuse thanks which were yet vaguely apologetic. The Grays and Mrs. Dan had remembered him with an agreeable lack of ostentation, and some of the Little Sons of the Rich who had kept one evening a fortnight open for the purpose of "using up their meal tickets" at Monty's were only too generously grateful. Miss Drew had forgotten him, and when they met after the holiday her recognition was of the coldest. He had thought that under the circumstances he could send her a gift of value, but the beautiful pearls with which he asked for a reconciliation were returned with "Miss Drew's thanks." He loved

"You are a thoroughbred, Mrs. Dan," he exclaimed.

Barbara sincerely, and it cut. Peggy Gray was taken into his confidence, and he was comforted by her encouragement. It was a bit difficult for her to advise him to try again, but his happiness was a thing she had at heart.

"It's beastly unfair, Peggy," he said. "I've really been white to her. I believe I'll chuck the whole business and leave New York."

"You're going away?" And there was just a suggestion of a catch in her breath.

"I'm going to charter a yacht and sail away from this place for three or four months." Peggy fairly gasped. "What do you think of the scheme?" he added, noticing the alarm and incredulity in her eyes.

"I think you'll end in the poorhouse, Monsieur Brewster," she said, with a laugh.

CHAPTER XIII.

IT was while Brewster was in the depths of despair that his financial affairs had a windfall. One of the banks in which his money was deposited failed, and his balance of over $100,000 was wiped out. Mismanagement was the cause, and the collapse came on Friday, the 13th day of the month. Needless to say, it destroyed every vestige of the superstition he may have had regarding Friday and the number thirteen.

Brewster had money deposited in five banks, a transaction inspired by the wild hope that one of them might some day suspend operations and thereby prove a legitimate benefit to him. There seemed no reason why the bank could resume operations, and if the depositors in the end realized 20 cents on the dollar they would be fortunate. Notwithstanding the fact that everybody had considered the institution substantial there were not a few wiseacres who called Brewster a fool and were so unreasonable as to say that he did not know how to handle money. He heard that Miss Drew in particular was bitterly sarcastic in referring to his stupidity.

This failure caused a tremendous flurry in banking circles. It was but natural that questions concerning the stability of other banks should be asked, and it was not long before many wild, misleading reports were afloat. Anxious depositors rushed into the big banking institutions and then rushed out again, partially assured that there was no danger. The newspapers sought to allay the fears of the people, but there were many to whom fear became panic. There were short, wild runs on some of the smaller banks, but all were in a fair way to restore confidence when out came the rumor that the Bank of Manhattan Island was in trouble. Colonel Prentiss Drew, railroad magnate, was the president of this bank.

When the bank opened for business on the Tuesday following the failure there was a stampede of frightened depositors. Before 11 o'clock the run had assumed ugly proportions, and no amount of argument could stay the onslaught. Colonel Drew and the directors, at first mildly distressed and then seeing that the affair had become serious, grew more alarmed than they would allow to let the public see. The loans of all of the banks were unusually large. Incipient runs on some had put all of them in an attitude of caution, and there was a natural reluctance to expose their own interests to jeopardy by coming to the relief of the Bank of Manhattan Island.

Shortly Brewster had something like $200,000 in Colonel Drew's bank. He would not have regretted on his own account

India rubber bands of all sorts, such as are found on some carpet-sweeping machines, etc., will last much longer if occasionally immersed in water.

White kid gloves can be cleaned on the hands by rubbing with oatmeal and benzaine, mixed to a paste. Continue rubbing until the paste drops off in dry, flaky bits.

Tar on the hands can be removed by rubbing with fresh lard and afterwards washing in warm water. To remove varnish, rub with methylated spirits before washing.

Before polishing furniture, rub it well with a cloth wrung out of tube-warm vinegar and water. This removes dust and dirt, and prevents that cloudy appearance one so often sees.

Children's slates should occasionally be washed in warm water, to which a little soda has been added. This takes off the greasiness that sometimes makes writing a difficulty.

When a stove becomes rusty, paint it with a mixture of lard, soap, and two cakes of blacklead boiled in a pint of stale beer. Let this dry, and polish with a hard brush, when the stove will take blacklead as usual.

To Clean Burned Dishes.—Baking dishes that become burned in the oven, and plates and platters that become blackened with the food scorched upon them, should not go through the tedious process of scraping. Simply put a little water and ashes in the dish, and let it become warm, and the burned and discolored portions may be easily cleaned without injuring the dish.

The barber was in an extra talkative mood. He had visited about twenty-three scenarios and questions to his customer, and was not exhausted at last he said:

"Hair's very thin, sir.

"It was thinner than that thirty years ago."

"Indeed, sir! You surprise me. Why you don't look more than thirty now, sir!"

"Thirty yesterday!"

The barber shut himself up the one of his razors.

WHAT'S IN McCLURES.

One function of the up-to-date magazine is to reflect the moving spirit of the time, and this is the striking thing about the December McClure's. As befits a holiday number, it is filled with good, strong fiction, there is a Jack London story one of his best, and six other short stories; but first in importance are the contributions of William Allen White, Ray Stannard Baker and the Rev. Charles D. Williams. William Allen White who, as a pulpit of public men has become almost the national oracle, cool, incisive, unerring, fixes the place of Folk in national affairs. He tells of his great accomplishments as Mayoralty measures the man, and finally shows that he is not big enough yet for Presidential timber.

"Railroad Rebates" is Ray Stannard Baker's second paper on the Railroad Question. He explains what rebates are, how they are paid, who pays them and how they affect industry; illustrating the whole process by specific instances, little human stories picked up from railroad men and shippers, the gainers and the sufferers by the system.

OBITUARY.

RICHARD WOODCOCK.

On Nov. 21st, on lot 10, ad concession of Richmond, there passed away one of our oldest and most respected citizens in the person of Richard Woodcock, Esq., at the ripe old age of 84 years and 9 months. The subject of this sketch was one of a family of eleven, all children of the late Isaac Woodcock, and now but one of all remains, namely John, of Dexter, N.Y. In his early life he followed the occupation of miller, his thinking that was a way of making money, he started out west with several others to open a farme. However here he got a good financial start, and the longing for home got so strong within him that he returned to Canada, afterward was married to Miss Minerva Dewitt, of Leinster. Their union was blessed with eight children, seven of whom survive, all of whom were with him during his latter hours to comfort him and to receive his father's last message of love. He was a very upright man and it was currently said amongst his neighbors that his word was as good as his cash, and of all the old residents none will be more truly missed. In politics he was a staunch conservative, and in religion a Methodist. He died happy in God's promises.

TOUCH OF TRUE MASTER

POWERFUL TO TEACH GREATEST OF LIFE'S LESSONS.

POINT TO ONLY COMFORTER

"Jesus, the Prince of Peace," the Solace of Men In These Latter Days of Countless Material Blessings Peculiar to This Progressive Age—Causes for Nation's Thankfulness Pointed Out By Preacher.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1905, by Frederick Dixon, of Toronto, at the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal. Nov. 26.—For the countless material blessings peculiar to this progressive age, as well as for the many spiritual blessings of our day, the preacher in this sermon gives expression to the nation's thankfulness. The text is Ecclesiastes vii., 24, "They have sought out many inventions."

A new star has arisen in the artistic firmament. Meteorlike a new star has flashed its light over the western horizon. A new star has come to lead us down to the manger of Bethlehem of Judaea. What General Lew Wallace has done with the novelist's pen young Ryam Shaw is doing with the painter's brush. The Indiana author and the young English artist, the latter born in Madras and educated in Paris, both in their studios, have both been bold, strong, powerful and independent interpreters of religious idealism. Lew Wallace's "Ben-Hur," "The Prince of India" and "The Boyhood of Christ" teach lessons similar to those of Ryam Shaw's "The Comforter," "The Outcast" and "Neither Hath He Power In the Day of Death." With the touch of true masters the inspired novelist and the inspired artist both teach that the only true comforter in time of earthly trouble is that Saviour whom we lovingly call, "Jesus, the Prince of Peace."

But, though Ryam Shaw has painted many pictures, there is one, based upon the book of Ecclesiastes, which has specially impressed me. It is one illustrating the theme of my text. The young artist in his original way seems to open for us the treasures of the British museum. In the foreground of his picture he places a Londoner, a British aristocrat, dressed in the height of fashion of the time of Disraeli. Then he seems to surround this man, clothed in knightly armor, with bat and maculate linen, with the mighty British library of over 2,000,000 volumes, in which are recorded the scientific and social triumphs of past ages. As you gaze on that picture, in imagination you seem to hear the whistle of factory, the click of trawel, the signal of the railroad engineer, the hoarse voice of the great Cunarder's fog horn sending her warning call among the mists of Newfoundland, and the ringing of the telephone bell, and we seem to see the flash of the electric spark. Then, under this powerful picture are its up-to-date Bible appliention, the young English artist has written the words of my text, "They have sought out many inventions." Never did these Solomonic words burn themselves into my mind and heart more deeply than when I saw them in the brilliant colors of Ryam Shaw's strange and yet powerful and startling picture.

But when studying that picture I asked myself these questions: "Do all modern inventions truly make men wretched and miserable, as King Solomon implies? Did King Solomon himself mean that all modern inventions were bad? Of course the greater opportunities of life, which come through the revolving wheels of machinery and the concentration of capital, do naturally offer greater opportunities for wicked men to do evil, but are all great inventions agents of evil?" "No," I answered. "As greater opportunities of life offer greater evils for wicked men, so great inventions afford greater opportunities of good for good men." Thus on this Sabbath preceding our national Thanksgiving day I will catalogue some of the blessings which, in a good sense, come to good men from the, sewing machine, the railroad, the factory, the telephone, the telegraph, the printing press and from all the other inventions that have made the past century the most remarkable in a scientific sense, of all the ages.

Most blessed of inventions, in the first place, those that deal with health, among which we class the sewerage pipes, by which a great city is kept sweet and clean, and the drains and ducts through which it is supplied with life, giving water to drink. What Solomon did when he built his three famous pools, from which reservoirs he carried the water by subterranean passages to the city of Jerusalem; what Tarquinius Priscus did 600 years before Christ when he built the famous canal Cloaca Maxima, the oldest and the most famous drainage canal in the world and which is still used to carry the refuse out of the city of Rome to the Tiber, the great engineers on all enlarged scale are doing for our own cities. These engineers may not have the title "M.D." affixed to their names, but they are the greatest of all preventers of disease. Truly they have done their work well.

If you do not realize how well they have succeeded, then study underground New York, or Chicago or Philadelphia or St. Louis, or Boston. Marvelous, staggering, wonderful and almost incomprehensible are the sights as there can witness. Some years ago it was my privilege to see underground New York being prepared for a great subway railroad. I have seen the noted Chicago drainage canal, built at the expense of many millions of dollars. My favorite walk when a student upon the banks of the Hudson was over the noted Croton aqueduct through which the water was brought from over thirty miles away to quench the thirst of the then small population of the metropolis. But, after all, the excavation for the New York underground railroad impressed me more than all the engineering feats I ever saw. As I looked down into those big subways I always felt as though I were in an operating room and seeing the surgeon's knife cutting its way, through intestines and veins in the laparotomic operation upon the great city of New York.

But, while thanking God for the reservoirs and the aqueducts and the pipe lines which bring to us pure water and the waste pipes which carry away the disease-breeding refuse, shall we not thank him also for the marvelous machinery that puts upon our tables the best viands that the harvest fields and the orchards afford? And when I speak of the machinery I am not only alluding to the reapers and the plows and the seed scatterers which we saw exhibited at the St. Louis and Paris world's fairs, but I also allude to the wonderful freight cars and the huge Atlantic and Pacific steamers with their refrigerators and cold storage plants, that bring to us the rarest and the choicest of fruits and vegetables and animal meats and fish and bird meats and mollusks, no matter where they may grow or what may be the breath of life.

Some people marvel at the mechanism which makes it possible for the farmer to sow and reap fields of wheat hundreds and thousands of acres in where their ancestors had only a few acres to a farm. "Tis true, we must gaze in awe at the mechanical marvels of the modern farm through the miracles of modern machinery. Last summer while riding through the prairies of Iowa a great machine going over the prairie where once the farmer went swinging his sythe at this rate of a thousand acres a day, this machine was called "a combined harvester." It was drawn by, thirty-two horses, driven by eight young men. That machine cut the wheat, thrashed the wheat, gathered the clean kernels into bags, put on the bags, threw them to one side and tossed the straw into heaps. All this happened while the farmer was out taking his pleasure ride behind his thirty-two horses. Marvelous, marvelous, wonderful, wonderful "combined harvester!" But the benefits which came to our table from "a combined harvester" are as nothing compared to those that come from the freight car and from the steamer.

Have you ever stopped to consider from how many various sources our food comes? I am nearing the coast of Sydney, Australia. I see running the railroad track great numbers of rabbits strung up. There are thousands and tens of thousands of them in the hillsides of New South Wales covered with sheep. I go to the wharfs, and there I find the steamer unloading loaded with them. "What is the good of talking these thousands of sheep and rabbits to London?" I say to the captain. "It will take you at least three or four weeks to sail there. That meat will then be unwholesome and nauseating and sickening." "No, no," answers the captain. "That meat is being stored in refrigerators. By our using liquid ammonia through the pipes and letting it evaporate we can make our own ice on shipboard. That meat will be sold in London markets as fresh as it is to-day." By the wonderful cold storage system of freight car and of steamship we can to-day eat the choicest fruits of the east and the west and have the tenderest of meats carried through the Red Sea and Suez Canal. The New Yorker can banquet upon California fruits, and the inhabitant of San Francisco, watching the seals climbing over "Seal Rocks" in the Cliff House restaurant, may order his oysters brought from Maryland Bay. Wonderful, wonderful food provider is machinery!

But I must stop describing the many different sources from which our Thanksgiving dinner comes, or else your hunger for material things will crowd out your desire for a spiritual Thanksgiving. Suffice to say the railroad track and the steam greyhound as well as the wonderful modern reaper and mower of the farm are expediting for us a Thanksgiving banquet of which the Romans and the Greeks and the Hebrews or even our own ancestors of a hundred years ago in the wildest flights of their imagination could never conceive or dream. No wonder all the menus or the bills of fare of all our large city restaurants are printed in a foreign language. Foreign lands contribute a great part to all American banquets. Thank God, Japan can furnish rice. Manchuria and Java will give Louisiana her sugar and China her tea.

But, though Ryam Shaw's pictures were dressed in garments cut and made a century old, yet, like our own clothes, they were all machine made garments. The linen came from the Belfast mills. The wools were woven not with a Priscilla's spinning wheel, but by the looms of the Manchester factory. The silks came from the silk mills, the kid gloves from the kid glove factories. The polka bonnets were made in the hat factories. The high silk hats, without which no British aristocrat feels that he is dressed as a gentleman, also came from the hat factory. And when we go through our own wardrobes we hear machinery humming our perpetual sentence: "I made you. I made you. I made you. I made the cloth of that coat. I made the cloth of that dress. I made that underwear. I made those shoes and those hats and those gloves. I made you." And why has machinery made all our clothes? For two reasons—first, because machinery can make our clothes much cheaper than the human hand can make them; reason the second, machinery can make the cloth much better and more suitable for comfort and ease.

You see you like the old hand-made clothes, hard to make, but clothes which, after they were made, never wore out. How would you like your great-grandmother to knit for you a pair of stockings like those your great-grandfather wore? You say these modern stocking are always getting holes in them. Yes, they are, but there is no danger of your grandfather's stockings having holes in them. Why? They were made as thick as a bedquilt. Then the beauty of them was that, like a modern Mother Hubbard dress, they would continually stretch and be made to fit any one, or, indeed, they would never truly fit any one. Then about their lasting—my, how they lasted! They lasted so long that after awhile they got as stiff as a board. They lasted so long that they would stretch all out of shape and kink up and make your grandfather thing that his big, clumsy, hand-made boots were filled with briers and nettles, but these stockings were too good, even then, to throw away, and our great-grandfather had to keep on wearing them, and the only place where those bedquilt stockings finished their period of service was when the old gentleman was buried in his casket. For my part, I would prefer my wife to have other duties than making my stockings. I prefer to trust machinery to make them rather than have her hands make them.

But, after discussing for a little while the benefits which machinery has given to us in our eating and drinking and our sanitation and in our wearing apparel, shall we stop there? Shall we not at least hint at the wonderful benefits that have come to us from telephone and telegraph and the modern newspapers and the lights by which we read in the evening hours, and from the typewriter, which has so lifted the onerous burdens of professional and mercantile life, and the electric cars which for 5 cents make it possible for a business man to be in his office at half-past eight in the morning and yet take his evening meal in a suburban home something like 20 miles away and grass-grown yard, as well as by wife and children? Shall we not thank God for the wonderful system of street lamps we have, which makes midnight in the city as light and as bright as midday and which light is the greatest of all crime preventers? And, above all, shall we not thank God for our library shelves filled with various machine was called "a combined harvester." It was drawn by, thirty-two horses, driven by eight young men. That machine cut the wheat, thrashed the wheat, gathered the clean kernels into bags, put on the bags, threw them to one side and tossed the straw into heaps. lors, dining-rooms and dormitories, moving gently as the bird flies over a road carpeted by turf and bordered by shade trees and sweet shrubs from Boston to San Francisco in four days. Have not the good people's prophets at almost literally come true? Shall we not soon leap the continent from the Atlantic to the Pacific in less than four days? Then Bishop Clark goes on and prophesies some of the wonderful inventions that are to follow the present electric world: "The electric battery, which now in some of our cities strikes the electric light, will be succeeded by evening to light all of our street lamps at one flash, secure perfect uniformity of time in our public clocks and kindle a beacon on these dreary rocks in the sea, where human beings now endure a melancholy and dangerous solitude." Bishop Clark from the celestial heights might see those electric lights shining to-day. Speak out, ye lonely islanders now in touch with mankind. Speak out!

As Bishop Clark in 1855 spoke in prophecies of "the next fifty years," so I may be permitted to speak from the Leading Ahead. I see a strange and wonderful world. Before my children shall die I see one-third of the surface of the past infinitely developed in producing power. I hear these machines calculating for us. I will make enough bread for all to eat. I will make enough clothes for all to wear. I will build enough houses for all to live in. I can sleep. I will print enough books for all to read. I will build enough temples for all to worship in. Can, O man, if the Christian people of your generation will do their Christian duty the human race will not only learn the fatherhood of God, but also the brotherhood of man. Then, instead of the few having too much and the many having nothing, there shall be enough bread for all and to spare. May God help us to hear to-day the voice of God in the voice of machinery bidding us to love the Lord our God with all our might, with our strength and our neighbors as ourselves!

Thus in closing this sermon on this Thanksgiving Day I would have us one and all, amid the great hum of factory and by the flash of electric spark, behold that the damage caused by fraternal inflammation. "Catarrhozone" always cures because it goes into those tiny cells and passages that ordinary remedies can't reach. Mr. H. M. P. Deroche will be in Tamworth every Wednesday. 14tf

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have cured thousands and thousands of rheumatic sufferers, some of them even crippled and helpless cases, like Mr. T. H. Smith, Chesterfield, Ont. "For a number of years I was badly troubled with rheumatism, and was at times so bad I could scarcely do any work. I tried advertised remedy after remedy, but they did not help me. Then I saw Dr. Williams' Pink Pills advertised as a cure for this trouble, and got a supply. After I had taken a few boxes I saw they were helping me, and I continued taking them until I was completely cured. I am now as well and strong as ever I was, and can do a full day's work without any fear of the return of the trouble. EVANGELISTIC SERVICES.

A series of meetings are in progress nightly in the Gospel Hall, Grange block, G. Pinches, evangelist, from England, is conducting them. A good attentive audience was present on Sunday evening, when the meetings opened. The old truths and doctrines of the bible are taught. Ruin by the fall, redemption by the blood and regeneration by the Holy Ghost, subjects of vital import to all, are spoken from, which in these days of unrest and sinfulness, coupled with so much irreverent criticism of the scriptures, is very needful to bring men to see their need of a Saviour, and to know the folly of rejecting God's offer of mercy. The interest continues in meetings nightly.

AMATEUR THEATRICALS.

The concert and amateur play put on by the young people of the Church of England Sunday School, in the Brines Opera House, on Tuesday evening, was a great success. The first part of the programme consisted of music, recitations, etc. During this part of the programme Miss Dorland, Mr. Henwood, Miss Emsley and other talented people of the town assisted. A new Karu piano, which Mr. Hart was kind enough to lend, added a cheerful and bright spirit to all the music. The second part of the programme consisted of a play, "Aleen Hasson the Wag," which was also well put on, and all sustained their parts like old actors, which could not well be otherwise as they were under the management of Mr. Dudley Hill. The bright and becoming costumes also added beauty to the acting. The house was well filled and everybody left well pleased with the efforts of our talented young people to furnish an evening of genuine amusement.

MRS. JOHN MORRISON.

On Wednesday evening, Nov. 22d, Mrs. John Morrison was suddenly called to meet her God and Saviour, whom she sincerely worshipped. She was born in County Tyrone, Ireland, seventy-five years ago, and came to Canada when about twelve years of age. She was married at Quebec in May, 1851, to John Morrison, also of Ireland, who pre-deceased her in January, 1887. She was at the time of her death sojourning with her daughter, Mrs. David Smith, of Parrott's Bay, and was about the house smart as was usual, on the day of her death, which occurred at 10.30 p.m. Her heart was weak and could not withstand a severe coughing spell, but her spirit took a peaceful flight to the God who gave it. She was a devoted member of the Methodist church. Three sons and one daughter mourn the loss of a loving, tender mother, John, of Odessa; Robert, of San Luis Potosi, Mexico; Francis, of Marysville; Annie, of Millhaven. Their sorrow is keen, they having been bereaved by death of a sister, Mrs. Miles Smith, of Odessa, on March 22d, of this same year.

THE TOWN WON.

The anxiously awaited judgment respecting the appeals against the electric light by-law was rendered on Monday last, and the action of the town council is sustained. In case an appeal should again be taken, the town council at its session on Monday night decided to submit another by-law to be voted on at the next municipal elections, which it is thought should place the action of the council beyond a peradventure. The following is the judgment of Justice Meredith:

Re Cartwright and Town of Napanee.

Judgment (L.) on motion by Richard Cartwright, as a ratepayer of the town, for an order quashing a by-law authorizing the construction and installation of an electric light plant and the purchase of the necessary land and the erection of the necessary buildings and providing for the issue of debentures to the amount of $35,000. Held, that although there were irregularities it was not a case in which it was incumbent upon the court to quash the by-law, and in the exercise of discretion the motion should be refused, but without costs, because irregularities ought to be discouraged. Order accordingly. W. E. Middleton for applicant. A. Bruce, K. C., and W. S. Herrington, K. C., for the town corporation.

Sad indeed was the death of Mrs. Jamie D'Arcy, who died at her home here, on the 10th Nov., after but a week's illness. MODEL SCHOOL AT HOME.

The at home given by the students of the Model School this year, came off on Friday evening last, and was a grand success. The programme given was a superior quality, and each of the various pieces, both musical and literary, given by the Model students we were favored by selections from noted talent outside the members of the institution. Among those were Miss Ella Lloyd, Miss Loggie, Miss Roby, Mrs. Vandervoort and Mr. C. E. Wills. The Misses Loggie rendered a duet to listen to three eloquent addresses delivered by Mr. Gibson, the chairman, Mr. Edwards and Mr. Dunwoody, of Napanee. The programme of visitors were treated to a sumptuous repast of sandwiches, cakes, coffee and ice cream. The affair broke up at a very reasonable hour. Mr. Gibson, who efficiently filled the chair, in one of the literal and symbolical sense of the word, deserves to be honored by that position next year.

HINCH

The concert at the hall, Hinch street, Dec. 1st, was a decided success. The hall was filled to the doors with an appreciative audience. Good music was rendered by Mr. and Mrs. Paul and Miss Bradshaw, and by Misses Kathleen and Inez Price, who by their graceful dancing deserve more than ordinary mention. Excellent recitations were given by Miss Hannah and Mr. Fred Hannah. The dialogues were good. Every item on the programme, which Miss Lena Hinch took her part well, and was ably supported by Miss Bradshaw, Miss Nell, and by Messrs. Delbert Wilson, Jack Wilson, Charlie Jennings, W. Price made a grand Irishman, and Messrs. Lodge, Lowry and Clare Hinch, Curtis Jennings, W. Price and E. Wilson kept down the mouth organs, accompanied by the Messrs Lowry and Lloyd. Refreshments were warmly applauded. The lantern views of interest to the City and our friends in the old Ireland interested those present. The proceeds were for good purposes and the door received by Mr. Robert Dowdle came to $15.70, so expenses will leave about $15.70 to be expended on needed improvements to the hall. Great credit is due to Miss Lena Hinch, Miss Clark and Hinch for promoting so enjoyable an evening. Mr. Fred Hannah was the man who took part in the programme Rev. E. Hendrick, of Camden East, was the chairman.

Zutoo

Regarding your Zutoo Tablets I beg to say: I have been a sufferer from headache since childhood and have used all, or nearly all, of the so-called "cures" on the market, till warned by my physician to discontinue their use on account of their bad effects on the heart. Some months since my attention was called to your Zutoo Tablets and I have been using them ever since with the most gratifying results. I find they cure a "sick" or "nervous" headache in a few minutes and leave no bad effect. My family use them whenever needed with equally good results. I have frequently given them to friends who were suffering from headache and they never fail to give quick relief. I find them a good remedy for "sour" stomach as well as headache. I always carry them in my grip on the road and would not be without them at any cost.

They Make Healthy Women

After consulting my physician and being told that I was suffering from a run-down condition which accounted for many other ills, with which I was suffering, I was presented with a box of brown tablets. I took them and in less than a week began to improve, and before two weeks had elapsed was so much better that I felt congratulations were due my physician. Upon complimenting him I was honestly informed by him that I had been taking Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women. It is of little consequence how I obtained the medicine, but of one thing I am certain, I have received greater benefit from it than any other medicine I ever used.—MISS FLORA CLARK,

Every Two Minutes

Physicians tell us that all the blood in a healthy human body passes through the heart once in every two minutes. If this action becomes irregular the whole body suffers. Poor health follows poor blood; Scott's Emulsion makes the blood pure. One reason why is such a great aid is because it passes so quickly into the blood. It is partly digested before it enters the stomach; a double advantage in this. Less work for the stomach; quicker and more direct benefits. To get the greatest amount of good with the least possible effort is the desire of everyone in poor health. Scott's Emulsion does just that. A change for the better takes place even before you expect it.

We will send you a sample free.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.
We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness, caused by catarrh, that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

PRESENTATION AND ADDRESS

At a special meeting of Croydon L. O. L., No. 490, Bro. Joseph Tesky was asked to take a seat at the front of the hall, where he was presented with a beautiful chair, one for himself and the other for Mrs. Tesky, and the following address, by the members of above Lodge.

Croydon, Nov. 14th, 1905.

Joseph Tesky,—

Dear Sir and Bro.,—It is with profound regret that we have assembled this said occasion of your departure from Lodge. During the long years of membership among you we have won many sincere friends who will ever cherish the remembrance of their association with you. We have found you always ready to visit and console the afflicted, and a staunch, kind and obliging friend. We cannot find words to express our sorrow at losing you, but we must not harbor such selfish sentiments, as our loss will be others' gain. In your new home and among your new acquaintances we trust you may still retain a loving regard for your Croydon friends and Brothers of Croydon Kinora, Lodge, No. 490, and may every blessing, freedom from all fare and anxiety, and many years of happiness, attend you.

As a slight token of our esteem and affection we beg you to accept these chairs, and hope that they may be a pleasant souvenir of the many years you spent at our gathering.

Signed on behalf of the members of L. O. L., No. 490.

Bro. Tesky replied by thanking the members of Croydon Lodge for the esteem in which they held him, in presenting to him those beautiful chairs, and not that he thought that during the twenty-seven years he had held office in said Lodge the services that he had rendered were worthy of any such gift, but what he had done was for the good of the association. He could never forget the many warm friends he had found around Croydon, and would be extended to all present his sincere thanks also on behalf of Mrs. Tesky, after which they all retired to Mr. M. Williams', where supper had been prepared for the occasion, after which they bade Bro. Tesky farewell.

Complimentary Banquet

A number of friends of County Commissioner James Brydon convened at the Victoria House on Friday evening last, to partake of a banquet and celebrate the moral victory won by the latter in the action brought against him, of which mention was made in The Beaver.

The party sat down to a sumptuous repast about 9 o'clock. After the cravings of the inner man were fully satisfied, the chairman, Warden Ponton, referred in glowing terms to his long association with Mr. Brydon, and was always found him a man worthy of the respect and esteem of all women.

The first toast was that of "The King," which was responded to by Mr. John T. Grange and County Commissioner Edward Paul. Both gentlemen were enthusiastic on the subject, and found it difficult to find words to express their admiration for Mr. Brydon as a man and member of the County Council.

Our Host, was replied to by responding to Commissioner H. A. Baker and County Clerk, W. G. Wilson.

The County Council" was also handled by Coun. Commissioners Clyde and D. C. Hogarth.

To give in full their remarks would be but a repetition to a certain extent of those who preceded them; all were sincerely agreed that it was a benefit and honor to be able to call Mr. Brydon a friend.

The Chairman, was responded to by Mr. Brydon and Mr. Martin. The former thanked his colleagues in the Council for the fair they opened him, in giving him more pleasure after that confidence and trust were shown before the trial and not after his honorable acquittal.

Mr. Martin said that as he had been speaking more or less during the evening as chairman, he would not take up any more time as the hour was getting late.

The gathering dispersed about 11 o'clock, all wishing Mr. Brydon every success in his new home, and hoped he would remain and finish his term in the County Council.

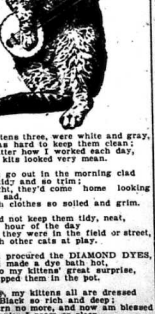
A FELINE DITTY
—ON—
DIAMOND DYES.



My kittens three, were white and gray,
'Twas hard to keep them clean;
No matter how I worked each day,
The kits looked very mean.

They'd go out in the morning clad
In tidy suits of trim;
At night, they'd come home looking sad,
With clothes so soiled and grim.

I could not keep them tidy, neat,
One hour of the day
Within my home, in field or street,
With other cats at play.

I then procured the DIAMOND DYES,
And now my kittens gleam
And to my kittens' great surprise,
I dipped them in the pot.

To-day, my kittens all are dressed
In Black so rich and deep;
I mourn no more, and now am blessed
I wonder I roam or sleep.

The moral of my song is plain,
To women bright and wise;
If you would pleasure, profit gain,
Just use the DIAMOND DYES.

Ogilvies' Reputation goes into every barrel of Royal Household Flour

If Royal Household Flour were not as good as Ogilvies say it is, who would be the greatest loser?

You would try it once—if it were not good you would be a small loser, perhaps.

But Ogilvies would probably lose your custom.

They would also lose the custom of every other woman who tried it and of thousands who had never tried it but had been told that it was not as represented.

Therefore Ogilvies must make Royal Household Flour the best flour because they stake their reputation upon it, and if you and thousands of others found it was not the best, Ogilvies would ruin their business.

So Ogilvies make Royal Household Flour the best flour, in their own protection. Incidentally that is your strongest protection—it guarantees you the best flour because the brand carries with it Ogilvie's Reputation.

Ogilvies simply ask a trial—knowing that it will make a permanent friend for Royal Household Flour.

BREWSTER'S MILLIONS

CHAPTER XIV.

MISS DREW'S cotillon was not graced by the presence of Montgomery Brewster. It came to be received an eleventh hour invitation and a very cold and difficult little note of apology, but he maintained heroically the air of disdain that had succeeded the first sharp pangs of disappointment. Colonel Drew, in whose good graces Monty had firmly established himself, was not quite guiltless of usurping the role of dictator in the effort to patch up a quarrel. A few nights before the cotillion, when Barbara told him that Brewster idling was to lead, he exclusively expressed surprise. "Why Monty Brewster, Babs?" he demanded.

"Brewster is not coming," she replied calmly.

"Going to be out of town?"

"Since I do not know," stiffly, "what's this?"

He has not been asked, father." Miss Drew was not in good humor.

"Not asked?" said the colonel in amazement. "It's ridiculous, Babs. Send him an invitation at once."

"You may dance, father, and I don't want to ask Mr. Brewster." The colonel sank back in his chair and struggled to overcome his anger. He knew that Barbara had inherited his firmness and had long since discovered that it was best to treat her with

"Might you and he were"— But the colonel's supply of tact was exhausted.

"Were" th a moment of absent-mindedness, "but it's all over," said Barbara.

"I should, there wouldn't have been occasion if it hadn't been for" The colonel remembered his promise to Monty and checked himself just in time. "I mean there will not be any trouble if Montgomery Brewster is sensible. That is all I care to say on the subject." And he stamped out of the room.

Barbara wept copiously after her father's departure, but she swallowed that his words were final and that Monty must be excluded. "I will send an invitation," she said to herself, "but if Mr. Brewster comes after he has read it I shall be surprised."

Montgomery, however, did not receive the note in the spirit in which it had been sent. He only saw in it a ray of hope that Barbara was relenting and was jubilant at the prospect of a reconciliation. The next Sunday he sought an interview with Miss Drew, but was received him with icy reserve. If he had thought to punish her by staying away it was evident that she felt equally responsible for a great deal of misery on his part. Both had been more or less unhappy, and both were resentfully obstinate. Brewster felt abused and insulted, while she felt that he had imposed upon her disgracefully. He was now ready to cry quits, and it surprised him to find her disposed rate. If he had expected to dictate the terms of peace he was woefully disappointed when she treated his advances with cool contempt.

"Barbara, you know I care very much for you," he was pleading, fairly on the road to submission. "I am sure you are not quite indifferent to me. This foolish misunderstanding must really be as disagreeable to you as it is to me."

"Indeed," she replied, lifting her brows disdainfully. "You are assuming a good deal, Mr. Brewster."

"I am merely recalling the fact that you once told me you cared. You would not promise anything, I know, but it meant much that you cared. A little difference could not have changed your feeling completely."

"When you are ready to treat me with respect I may listen to your petition," she said, rising haughtily. "My petition?" He did not like the word, and his tact quite deserted him. "It's as much yours as mine. Don't throw the burden of responsibility on me, Miss Drew."

Have I suggested going back to the old relations? You will pardon me if I remind you of the fact that you came to me of your own initiative and certainly without my solicitation."

Now, look here, Barbara"— he began, really realizing that it was going to be hard, very hard, to bring her to terms.

"I am very sorry, Mr. Brewster, but you will have to excuse me. I am going out."

"I regret exceedingly that I should have disturbed you today," said Miss Drew, her cold, swallowing his pride. "Perhaps I may have the pleasure of seeing you again."

As he was leaving the house, deep anger in his soul, he encountered the colonel. There was something about Monty's greeting, cordial as it was, that gave the older man a hint as to the situation.

"Won't you stop for dinner, Monty?" he asked in the hope that his suspicions were groundless.

"Thank you, colonel, not tonight," said he was off before the colonel could hold him.

Barbara was tearfully angry when her father came into the room, but as he began to remonstrate with her the tears disappeared and left her at white heat.

"Frankly, father, you don't understand matters," she said, with slow emphasis. "I wish you to know now that if Montgomery Brewster calls again I shall not see him."

"If that is your point of view, Barbara, I wish you to know mine." The colonel rose and stood over her, everything forgotten but the rage that went to the least."

"But I am sure—I know this quarrel is something we'll laugh over. You keep forgetting that we are going to be married some day."

A new light came into Barbara's eyes. "You forget that my consent may be necessary," she said.

"You will be perfectly willing when the time comes. I am still in the fight and eventually you will come to my way of thinking."

"Oh! I see it now," said Barbara, and her blood was up. "You mean to force me to it. What you did for father"—

Brewster glowered at her, thinking that he had misunderstood. "What do you mean?" he said.

"He has told me all about that wretched bank business. But poor

"If it had not been for him we might have been ruined." father thought pur quite disinterested. He did not see the little game behind your melodrama. He would have torn up your check on the instant if he had suspected you were trying to buy his daughter."

"Does your father believe that?" asked Brewster.

"No, but I see it all now. His persistence and yours—you were not slow to grasp the opportunity he offered."

"Stop, Miss Drew," Monty commanded. His voice had changed, and she had never before seen that look in his eyes. "You need have no fear that I will trouble you again."

CHAPTER XV.

A TYPOGRAPHICAL error in one of the papers caused no end of amusement to every one except Monty and Miss Drew. The headlines had announced, "Magnificent Ball to Be Given Miss Drew by Her Finance," and the Little Sons of the Rich wondered why Monty did not see the humor of it.

"He has too bad an attack to see anything but the lady," said Harrison one evening when the Sons were gathered for an old time supper party.

"It's always the way," commented the philosophical Braglon. "When you lose your heart your sense of humor goes too. Engaged couples couldn't do such ridiculous stunts if they had the least particle of it left."

"Well, if Monty Brewster is still in love with Miss Drew he has a mighty poor way of showing it." Subway Smith's remark fell like a bombshell. The thought had come to every one, but no one had been given the courage to utter it. For them Brewster's silence on the subject since the DeMille dinner seemed to have something ominous behind it.

"It's probably only a lovers' quarrel," said Braglon. But further comment was cut short by the entrance of Monty himself, and they took their places at table.

Before the evening came to an end they were in possession of many astonishing details in connection with the coming ball. Monty did not say that it was to be given for Miss Drew, but her name was conspicuously absent from his descriptions. As he unfolded his plans even the Little Sons, who were imaginative by instinct and reckless on principle, could not be quite acquiescent.

Nopper Harrison solemnly expressed the opinion that the ball would cost Brewster at least $125,000. The Little Sons looked at one another in consternation, while Brewster's indifference expressed itself in an unfurnishing comment upon his friend's vulgarity. "Good Lord, Nopper," he added, "you would speculate about the price of gloves for your wedding!"

Pettingill interrupted the taunt. "It would be much less vulgar to do that, Monty, saving your presence, than to force your millions down every one's throat."

"Well, they swallow them, I've noticed," retorted Brewster, "as though they were chocolates."

Pettingill interrupted grandiloquently, "My friends and gentlemen!"

"Which is which?" asked Van Winkle casually.

But the artist was in the saddle. "Permit me to present you to the boy Croesus—the only one extant. His marbles are golden balls, and his kites are made of fifty dollar notes. He feeds upon coupons a la Newburg, and his champagne is liquid golden eagles. Look at him, gentlemen, while you can and watch him while he spends $13,000 for flowers!"

"With a Viennese orchestra for twenty-nine thousand!" added Braglon. "And yet they maintain that silence is golden."

"And three singers to divide twelve thousand among themselves! That's absolutely criminal!" cried Van Winkle.

"Over in Germany they'd sing a month for half that amount."

"Six hundred guests to feed—total cost of not less than $40,000," groaned Nopper dolefully.

"And there aregt 600 in town," lamented Subway Smith. "All that glory wasted on 200 rank outsiders."

"You men are borrowing a lot of trouble," yawned Brewster, with a gallant effort to seem bored. "All I ask of you is to come to the party and put up a good imitation of having the time of your life. Between you and me, I'd rather be caught drinking ice cream soda than giving this thing. But"—

"That's what we want to know—but what?" and Subway leaned forward eagerly.

"But," continued Monty, "I am in for it now, and it is going to be a ball that is a ball."

Nevertheless the optimistic Brewster could not find the courage to tell Peggy of these picturesque extravagances. To satisfy her curiosity he blandly informed her that he was getting off much more cheaply than he had expected. He laughingly denounced as untrue the stories that had come to her from outside sources, and before his convincing assertions that reports were ridiculously exaggerated the troubled expression in the girl's eyes disappeared.

"I must seem a fool," groaned Monty as he left the house after one of these explanatory trials, "but what will she think of me toward the end of the year when I am really in harness?" He found it hard to control the desire to be straight with Peggy and tell her the story of his mad race in pursuit of poverty.

Preparations for the ball went on steadily, and in a dull winter it had its color value for society. It was to be a Spanish costume ball, and at many tea tables the talk of it was a godsend. Sarcastic as it frequently was on the question of Monty's extravagance, there was a splendor about the Aladdin-like entertainment which had a charm. Beneath the outward disapproval there was a secret admiration of the superb nerve of the man. And there was little reluctance to help him on the wild career he had chosen. It was so easy to go with him to the edge of the precipice and let him take the plunge alone. Only the echo of the criticism reached Brewster, for he had silenced Harrison with work and Pettingill with opportunities. It troubled him little, as he was engaged in jotting down items that swelled the profit side of his ledger account enormously. The ball was bound to give him a good lead in the race once more despite the heavy handicap the Stock Exchange had imposed. The Little Sons took off their coats and helped Pettingill in the work of preparation. He found them quite superfluous, for their ideas never agreed, and each man had a way of preferring his own suggestion. To Brewster's chagrin, they were united in the effort to curb his extravagance.

"He'll be giving automobiles and rope of pearls for favors if we don't stop him," said Subway Smith after Monty had ordered a vintage champagne to be served during the entire evening. "Give them two glasses first, if you like, and then they won't mind if they have cider the rest of the night."

"Monty is plain dotty," chimed in Braglon, "and the pace is beginning to tell on him."

As a matter of fact the pace was beginning to tell on Brewster. Work and worry were plainly having an effect on his health. His color was bad, his eyes were losing their luster, and there was a listlessness in his actions that even determined effort could not conceal from his friends. Little fits of fever annoyed him occasionally, and he admitted that he did not feel quite right.

"Something is wrong somewhere," he said carefully, "and my whole system seems ready to stop work through sympathy."

Suddenly there was a mighty check to the preparations. Two days before the date set for the ball everything came to a standstill and the managers sank back in perplexity and consternation. Monty Brewster was critically ill.

Appendicitis, the doctors called it, and an operation was imperative.

"Thank heaven it's fashionable," laughed Monty, who showed no fear of the prospect. "How ridiculous if it had been the mumps or if the newspapers had said, 'On account of the whooping cough Mr. Brewster did not attend his ball!'"

"You don't mean to say—the ball is off, of course," And Harrison was really alarmed.

"Not a bit of it, Nopper," said Monty. "It's what I've been wanting all along. You chaps do the handshaking and I stay at home."

There was an immediate council of war when this piece of news was announced, and the Little Sons were unanimous in favor of upsetting the invitations and declaring the party off. At first Monty was obdurate, but when some one suggested that he could give the ball later on, after he was well, he relented. The opportunity to double the cost by giving two parties was not to be ignored.

"Call it off, then, but say that it is only postponed."

A great rushing to and fro resulted in the countermanding of the decalling of invitations, the settlement of accounts, with the most loyal effort to save as much as possible from the wreckage. Harrison and his associates, almost frantic with fear for Brewster's life, managed to perform wonders in the few hours of grace. Gardner, with rare foresight, saw that the Viennese orchestra would prove a dead loss. He suggested the possibility of a concert tour through the country, covering several weeks, and Monty, too ill to care one way or the other, authorized him to carry out the plan if it seemed feasible.

To Monty, fearless and less disturbed than any other member of his circle, appendicitis seemed as inevitable as a cyclone.

"The appendix is becoming an important feature in the book of life," he once told Peggy Gray.

He refused to go to a hospital, but pathetically begged to be taken to his old rooms at Mrs. Gray's.

With all the underlying loneliness of a sick boy he craved the care and companionship of those who seemed a part of his own. Lorlie had thumbs transform a small bedchamber into a model operating room, and Monty took no small satisfaction in the thought that if he was to be denied the privilege of spending money for several weeks he would at least make his illness as expensive as possible. A consultation of eminent surgeons was called; but, true to his colors, Brewster installed Dr. Lotless, a Little Son, as his house surgeon. Monty grimly bore his pain and suffering and submitted to the operation which alone could save his life. Then came the struggle, then the promise of victory and then the quiet days of convalescence. In the little room where he had dreamed his boyish dreams and suffered his boyish sorrows he struggled against death and gradually emerged from the mists of lassitude. He found it harder than he had thought to come back to life. The burden of it all seemed heavy. The trained nurses found that some more powerful stimulant than the medicine was necessary to bring back vitality, and they discovered it at last in Peggy.

"Child," he said to her the first time she was permitted to see him, while his face had lights in them, "do you know, this isn't such a bad world after all. Sometimes as I've lain here I've almost welcomed pain, but there are things that straighten it out. Today I feel as though I had a place in it—as though I could fight things and win. Do you think so, Peggy? Do you suppose there is something that I could do? You know what I mean—something that some one else could not do a thousand times better."

But Peggy, to whom this chastened mood in Monty was infinitely pathetic, would not let him talk. She soothed him and cheered him and touched his hair with her cool hands, and then she left him to think and brood and dream.

It was many days before his turbulent mind drifted to the subject of money, but suddenly he found himself hoping that the surgeons would be permitted to keep their charges. He almost suffered a relapse when Lotless, visibly distressed, informed him that the total amount would reach $3,000.

"Is that in the additional charge for the operation?" asked Monty, unwilling to accept such unwarranted favors.

"It's included in the $3,000," said Lotless. "They knew you were my friend, and it was professional courtesy to waive their expenses."

For days Brewster remained at Mrs. Gray's, happy in its restfulness, serene under the charm of Peggy's presence, and satisfied to be hopelessly behind in his daily expense account. The interest shown by the inquiries at the house and the anxiety of his friends were soothing to his convalescence. It gave him back a little of his lost self respect. The doctors finally decided that he would best recuperate in Florida and ordered him away at last in the warmth. He leaped at the proposition, but took the law into his own hands by ordering General Manager Harrison to the front and insisting that he needed the companionship of Peggy and Mrs. Gray.

"How much can I get back to work, doctor?" demanded Monty the day before the special train was to carry him south. He was beginning to see the dark side of his financial affairs. His blood again was tingling with the desire to be back in the harness of a speedthrift.

"To work!" laughed the physician. "And what is your occupation, pray?"

"Making other people rich," responded Brewster grimly.

"Well, aren't you satisfied with what you have done for me? If you are as charitable as that you must be still pretty rich. I prescribe that you may be on your feet again in five or six weeks."

Harrison came in as Lotless left. Peggy smiled at him from the window. She had been reading aloud from a novel so garrulous that it fairly cried aloud for interruption.

"Now, Nopper, what became of the ball I was going to give?" demanded Monty, a troubled look in his eyes.

"Why, we called it off," said Nopper in surprise.

"Don't you remember, Monty?" asked Peggy, looking up quickly and wondering if his mind had gone trailing off.

"I know we didn't give it, of course, but what date did you hit upon."

"We didn't postpone it at all," said Nopper. "How could we? We didn't know whether—I mean, it wouldn't have been quite right to do that sort of thing."

"I understand. Well, what has become of the orchestra and the flowers and all that?"

"The orchestra is gallivanting around the country, quarreling with itself and everybody else and driving poor Gardner to the insane asylum. The flowers have lost their bloom long ago."

"Well, we'll get together, Nopper, and try to have the ball at mid-Lent. I think I'll be well by that time."

Peggy looked appealingly at Harrison for guidance, but to him silence seemed the better part of valor, and he went off wondering if the illness had completely carried away Monty's reason.

CHAPTER XVI.

IT was the cottage of a New York millionaire which had fallen to Brewster. The owner had, for the time, preferred Italy to St. Augustine and left his estate, which was well located and lavishly equipped, in the hands of his friends. Brewster's lease covered three months, at a fabulous rate per month! With Joe Bragdon installed as manager in chief, his establishment was transferred bodily from New York, and the rooms were soon as comfortable as their grandeur would permit. Brewster was not allowed to take advantage of his horses and the new automobile which preceded him from New York, but to his guests they offered unlimited opportunities.

Nopper Harrison had remained in the north to renew arrangements for the new hotel bill and to look after the advance details of the yacht cruise. Dr. Lotless and his sister, with Subway Smith and the Grays, made up Brewster's party. Lotless dampened Monty's spirits by relentlessly putting him on rigid diet, with most discouraging restrictions upon his conduct. The period of convalescence was to be an exceedingly trying one for the invalid. At first he was kept indoors, and the hours were dreary ones by playing cards, but Monty considered bridge the pons asinorum and preferred to play piquet with Peggy. It was one of these games that the girl interrupted with a question that had troubled her for many days. "Monty," she said, and she found it much more difficult than when she had rehearsed the scene in the silence of her walks, "I've heard a rumor that Miss Drew and her mother have taken rooms at the hotel. Wouldn't it be pleasanter to have them here?"

A heavy gloom settled upon Brewster's face, and the girl's heart dropped like lead. She had puzzled over the estrangement and wondered if by any effort of her own things could be set right. Since she had had flashing hopes that it did not mean as much to Monty as she had thought, but down underneath, the fear that he was unhappy seemed the only certain thing in life. She felt that she must make sure. And together with the very human desire to know the worst was the practical impulse to bring it about.

"You forget that this is the last place they would care to invade." And Brewster's face Peggy seemed to read that for her martyrdom was the only wear. Bravely she put it on.

"Monty, I forget nothing that I really know. But this is a case in which you are quite wrong. Where is your sporting blood? You have never fought a losing fight before, and you can't do it now. You have lost your nerve, Monty. Don't you see that this is the time for an aggressive campaign?" Somehow she was not saying things at all as she had planned to say them, and his gloom weighed heavily upon her. "You don't mind, do you, Monty," she added more softly, "this sort of thing from me? I know I ought not to interfere, but I've known you so long, and I hate to see things twisted by a false mistake."

But Monty did ruind enormously. He had no desire to talk about the thing Peggy had touched so unerringly and himself seemed a bit unnecessary. Manifestly her own interest in him was of the coldest. From out of the gloom he looked at her somewhat sullenly. For the chartering of the Nautilus the steam yacht belonging to Reginald Brown, late of Brown & Rowe.

"Not at all." Brewster took it up. "She has no faith in me. She thinks I'm an ass."

"Perhaps she's right," she exclaimed, a little hot. "Perhaps you have never discovered that girls say many things to hide their emotions. Perhaps you don't realize what feverish, exclamatory, foolish things girls are. They don't know how to be honest with the men they love, and they wouldn't if they could. Like little pieces of an idiot, Monty Brewster, if you believed the things she said rather than the things she looked."

And Peggy, gery and determined and defiantly unhappy, threw down her cards and escaped so that she might not prove herself regrtfully feminine. She left Brewster still heavily enveloped in melancholy, but she left him puzzled. He began to wonder if Barbara Drew did have something in the back of her mind. Then he found his thoughts wandering off toward Peggy, and her defiance. He had only twice before seen her in that mood, and he liked it. He remembered how she had lost her temper once when she was fifteen and hated a girl he admired. Suddenly the hindgird slend at the thought of the fierce little picture she had made, and the gloom which had been so sedulously cultivated was dissipated in a moment. The laugh surprised the man who brought in some letters. One of them was from Nopper Harrison and gave him all the private news. The ball was to be given at mid-Lent, which arrived toward the end of March, and preparations were well under way for the chartering of the Nautilus, the steam yacht belonging to Reginald Brown, late of Brown & Rowe.

THE ROOT OF NEURALGIC HEADACHE.

Is an irritable condition of the nerves caused by cold. Relief comes quick by from Nervoline, the great pain reliever of to-day. Nervoline Nerve Tonic is a magical remedy for neuralgia, writes Mrs. E. G. Harris of Baltimore. But I never worry if Nervoline is in the house. A few applications never fail to kill the pain. I can also recommend Nervoline for stiffness, congestion and muscular pains. In use nearly fifty years ; try Nervoline ourselves.

A GRAND SUCCESS.

The annual oyster supper and concert, under the auspices of the Napanee Fire Brigade, held at the town hall on Wednesday evening, was a grand success in every particular. About 250 sat down to supper, after which the concert programme was given. The instrumental solo by Miss Hall was greatly enjoyed. Mayor Lavery presided, and after a few remarks Messrs. Graham, Carson, Black and Wagar rendered an excellent quartette. The address by Rev. W. H. Emsley was particularly instructive, as also was Mayor Maddo's. The song by the mixed quartette, Miss Light, Mrs. Real, Messrs. Nichol and Paul, was well received. A second selection by the male quartette, and "God Save the King," brought to a close a very pleasant evening.

CONCERT AT THE HITCH.

Speaking of Miss Marietta LaDell, who appears here with her concert company on Tuesday, December 12th, at the Napanee Opera House, the Toronto globe says, "A Siddons in tragedy, a Fisher in comedy, a LaDell in mimicry. Miss LaDell took the house by storm and received a double encore for nearly every number." The violinist, Mr. George Fox, is no mean violinist of Canada, and is an artist of extraordinary talent. He has the happy faculty of playing to the souls of his audience. Signorina Emily Frances Scott has sung frequently in Massey Hall, Toronto, and has made a great success not merely in Canada but in the United States. The Atlanta Constitutional says that she has a voice of unusual range and sweetness.

BENEATH WAGGON WHEEL.

Fred. Howard, a teamster in the employ of McKay & Forsythe Toronto, was fatally crushed beneath the wheels of his own waggon in that city on Tuesday. He was run over, and lived but half an hour. Howard was driving a team of horses attached to a load of lumber. After passing over the railway tracks he climbed on the waggon, thinking he would have better control of his horses in going down a steep and dangerous grade at this point. He was guiding the horses carefully, when he slipped and fell backwards. His head struck the ground with such force that he was rendered unconscious. The horses were pulled around when their driver fell, with the result that one of the wheels passed over his chest, inflicting the fatal injuries.

Deceased was 32 years old, and roomed at 167 Niagara street. His brother-in-law identified and claimed the body. Deceased was a brother of Messrs. Sam and Henry Howard, Napanee.

Sarah Bernhardt and her entire company of eminent French artists from the Theatre Sarah Bernhardt in Paris. The date set for the appearance of the greatest of living actresses in Kingston is Friday, December 8th, at the Grand Opera House, where she will present her own version of Adrienne Lecouvreur. That Bernhardt is many-sided is evidenced by the record of her accomplishments. Her ability as a playwright has been recognized abroad as well as in France and one of the most important of her productions during the present American tour will be a version of Adrienne Lecouvreur in six acts by Mme. Sarah Bernhardt.

Special attention will be given to mail orders from all points that are addressed to D. P. Brannigan, Kingston, the manager of the theatre and when are accompanied by cheque or money order. CIRCLING COMPLAINTS

LIKE A BOOMERANG SCOLD'S DENUNCIATIONS COME BACK.

BREEZY SERMON OF CHEER

Stirring Note of Arousal and Fresh Encouragement to Those Who Are Disposed to Sink In the Battle of Life and to Give Way to Unavailing Regrets—World Has No Use For Pessimists.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada in the year 1905, by Frederick Dixon, of Toronto, at the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Dec. 3.—In this sermon the preacher sounds a stirring note of arousal and fresh encouragement to those who are disposed to sink in the battle of life and to give way to unavailing regrets. The text is II. Samuel xix. 15, "So the king returned and came to Jordan."

The world has no use for the common scold. When universal fault finders can see nothing but shortcomings in their fellow men they are apt to become quite similar to those to which they themselves are addicted. What is the matter with you?" the clapper asked the cracked bell in the old belfry end. "You utter nothing but discords. You are no good to anybody." "Yes," answered the bell. "That may be true. But what are you complaining about? Was not my metal all right until you sounded a crack in me?" And, furthermore, would not the world think I was all right now if you did not continue to pound me and emphasize my weaknesses?" So it often happens that the people who are most active in denouncing the weaknesses of others are really denouncing the evil results of which they themselves are the direct or indirect causes. Like a boomerang, their complaints fly in a circle. They strike back at the very line which started those complaints on their evil flight.

The world has but little use for the common scold. It has also little use for those who do not heed the danger signals of life which are lifted all about them. It has unutterable contempt for the pilot who will not steer away from the buoys marking the dangerous reefs or for the engineer who will not stop his locomotive when the warning torpedo is exploded under his wheel, or for the sea captain who will not keep his eye upon the falling barometer when the ship is drawing near the lee berg regions, or for the physician who does not keep a careful record of the patient's fever, or for the statesman who does not ferret out and check the evils skulking behind the pillars of the legislative halls. There is no sense in declaring that the sun is shining when a tornado is battering down the harbests and knocking the unripe fruit off the swaying branches. It is no sign of great virtue to be always looking upon the bright side of things when conditions about us are all awry and could be made right if we would only go forth to grapple with the wrongs and scatter the causes that are bringing forth evil results.

Ben, Judah was not a common scold; neither was he one of those washy washy, effeminate, pusillanimous characters who are afraid to say that their souls are their own. He could speak out boldly and bravely when it behooved him to speak. And when the time did right, Joab was ready to say, "Thou art right, O my king." When the king did wrong, Joab was also ready to say "Thou are wrong, O my king." And because he was ready to denounce the king's follies just as emphatically as he was to praise the king's virtues he was able to exercise the far-reaching influence on David's life that is described in the chapter of my text.

In the first place, the iconoclast opened the eyes of the king to the many blessings with which he was surrounded. With one herculean blow Joab shattered the idol of the king's grief and made him stop worshipping at the shrine of his wayward son's grave. With the keen, sharp edge of a friend he went into the royal bedroom and cut and slashed that weeping parent with his verbal stiletto until every true king realized that even a father has no right to spend a lifetime bemoaning a dead Absalom if by such conduct he is doing an injustice to his living friends. And yet, my brothers, how many men and women there are just like David. They never seem to be able to turn their weeping eyes away from the focus of a tombstone. They never seem to be able to see the laughing eyes and the smiling lips or to hear the loving words of those who are living for them in the memories and sitting rooms of their own homes.

The greatest battle of David's career was over. It was an awful battle. During the hours of that day the king's throne had been tottering upon its foundations. As Alfred the Great had to flee his capital when he was defeated by the Danes at Athelney, and as Robert Bruce was an exile in Ireland for six long years before he came back to his Scottish throne, and as Charles II. was a wanderer upon the face of the earth when Cromwell was dictator at Westminster, so David, on account of the uprising of his son Absalom, was a fugitive from his Jerusalem palace. It was a mere playful squall which had struck his ship of state. It was a tornado, which was ripping the sails and making the nations sing under the foaming, raging billows. King David's head was in danger, and the whole royal family were menaced by the insurrection of which this dissolute prince was the leader. The young prodigal, David, on Tower met the same kind of a fate which Prince Absalom had planned out for his father. It was a mere lucky shot he did the king's friends rally to his standard that at the risk of their fortunes and their lives fight the kingly battles and win back for him his throne and kill the young prodigal whom the king closed his eyes to all his friends' sacrifices. All he did was to sit in his room and weep and bemoan and wring his hands and cry: "Oh, Absalom, my son, my son, my poor dead boy! Oh, Absalom, my dead boy, my son, my poor boy!" He kept this crying and wailing up for hours and days. At last Joab heard of the king's ingratitude. He walked into the royal chamber and said: "My king, have you any heart? Can you not realize the sacrifices we have made for you? Can you not come forth and thank us for shielding our lives and for not only weeping over the lives of some people who have been untrue to you and open your eyes to the sacrifices of those who have been devoting themselves to your comfort and happiness for the last ten or perhaps twenty years?

You have lost a child. He died as the result of his own wicked career. Yet you weep and cry for that child as though he had been to you a saint. What about the other children? What about those lovely daughters and that fine young son who are growing up by your side? Are you just as blind to you try to make home happy for them? Are you true to them. You have a dissolute father. Oh, you have been complaining, "If my father were only what he ought to be!" Well, he is not. You cannot help that. But what about your mother? Have you ever thanked God that you have such a mother? Have you not the noble example of her daily sacrifices been enough to start out a dozen boys like you right, even though your father has not been what he ought to be? And yet the strange fact of life is this: Most of our modern King Davids will go on blinding their eyes and complaining about the one sheep who has done them a wrong and neglect to show gratitude to the hundred of noble souls about them who are doing all in their power to make them happy and blessed.

Oh, the meanness of not trying to do all we can for those who are doing everything for us! Some years ago there joined my church one of the most beautiful women I ever knew. Her father died when she was a young girl. Then the executors robbed the widowed mother of her money. This young girl, who was brought up in luxury, went forth to earn her daily bread. The mother never complained, for she realize what that daughter was doing. From morning until night she kept up her never ending series of sacrifices. She complained about being left a widow; she complained about loss of money; she complained about the hard had to live where she did and that her daughter had to be away all day long. "But," I said one day, "madam, you surely should be thankful for that girl of yours. A nobler girl I never knew. Of course you love to be with her, but think of her down at the office working. It is not very pleasant for her." "Yes," she said the complaining old lady; "I suppose I ought to be thankful and not complain, but it is my disposition, and I can't help it." Yes, and how many of us are like that dissatisfied old lady! How many of us are like King David! We brood over our quiet fortunes so long that we not only make life miserable for ourselves but add to the burdens of those who are striving to make our lives happy and blessed.

But King David was awakened to more than a sentimental realization of his blessings. Joab gave him a rude, a moral and spiritual galvanic shock, which startled his hands, his ears, his eyes, as never before. He sprang to his king leap to his feet and stop his foolishness. Gen. Joab practically said to King David: "It is not only foolish and contemptible for you to ignore the sacrifices your people have made for you, but it is more: This foolish crying proves to the world that you are unfit to be king. If you do not stop it your best friends will turn against you. Within a few weeks you will have another insurrection upon your hands, compared to which the last uprising will seem only a plaything. You will be hurled from your throne, and another will take your place, and that rightly, for if a man does not do as he ought to do the world will throw him aside, and he will have no one to blame but himself." Ah, that was a brave act of Gen. Joab! It was one of the bravest acts of his life. He was willing, if necessary, to sacrifice his own life in order that his friend and king might see the error of his ways and guard against the danger lurking at his feet. Are you and I willing to be as true to your friends as Joab was to his king?

It is easy to praise our friends when they do right or to defend them when they have injustice perpetrated against them. The story is told that many years ago the officers of the army of the King of Hanover refused to have anything to do with a young colonel who had been promoted on the field of battle for gallantry. They claimed that he was not their social equal even though the shoulder straps of a commissioned officer were his. The king heard about the boycott. The next day at parade he called the young man to his side. Then, arm in arm with the lieutenant, he walked down the whole army assembled on dress parade. Then that night, as his special guest, the king took the young officer with him to a banquet. Of course when the king went arm in arm with the young man the other officers at once felt he was not only their social equal, but a friend well worth cultivating. "Yes," I said to myself as I read that story, "how easy it is for some of us to walk arm in arm with our friends when they are doing right, but how hard it is for some of us to take the hands of our friends when they do wrong and to speak to them kindly and firmly and yet lovingly, as Joab told King David about his faults."

But we must not stop here. When we find King David going forth to work we also find Gen. Joab, the great emancipator of grief. When we find David being induced to go forth to meet the responsibilities of his kingdom we find him breaking the shackles of sorrow which have bound him hand and foot, as the Roman captives used to be bound to the chariots of their conquerors in the triumphal entries into the capital of the Cæsars. And thus, my friends, if you and I want to be truly helpful to our friends in their time of trouble, we should not try so much to pet them and sympathize with them, but we should go as Gen. Joab went to King David to compel them to go forth and do something.

Work is the best panacea for grief. Many years ago a great trouble came to my father's home. The best comforter my father had was not to be found among those who came to weep with him and to sympathize with him, but the best comforter was the old classmate who came and said: "Dr. Witt, I am going through trouble far worse than yours. My wife for ten years has been in the insane asylum. I want to give you the only cure I know to help you at this time. Do not stay at home and cry. Go forth into God's great harvest field and work. Work for God in the name of work for God at noon, work for God at night, work and keep on working for God all the time, and the blessed comfort from God will be yours." Thus, my brother, when you and I are going to carry true comfort to our friends in their time of trouble do not go to them to pet them. Go to them and rouse them out of their sorrow by urging them to do something for some one else. It was by work that David overcame his grief, not by childish tears and sobs and weepings in the silence of his bedchamber.

But there is another fact I want you to notice about Joab's upbraidment and denunciation. He did not waste any words about other people's shortcomings. He did not go to the king and say, "Now, David, Absalom was an ungrateful dog. You ought to have hanged him long ago. And those people who mutinied against you and made you flee from your capital ought to be sought out and punished." Oh, no, Joab did not bother himself about crying over the departed past. He practically said to David: "Here, the insurrection has taken place. An awful lot of damage has been done. There is no use of talking about who caused the difficulty. The one great fact we want to solve is how can we get the kingdom back upon its old, stable foundation. It is not now a question who set fire to your palace, but how we can put the conflagration out. Now, you had better get out of this room as soon as possible and get back to your capital and pick up the reins of government without one moment's delay." And David returned to the gate of Jordan and went back to Jerusalem. Are you and I ready to do as did David? Are you trying to jump in and overcome the evil deeds of others instead of sitting down and crying about them and magnifying them?

But I must not close without drawing your earnest attention to one other fact. The awakened king was not a young man. He was not even a middle-aged man. In fact his hair was white and his step was becoming slower with age, and he knew it. William E. Gladstone said just a little before he gave up his Irish premiership, "I feel that the sands of my life are running out." King David must have felt his sands of life running away also. His grown children proved it. Absalom must have been a grown man. No mere boy could have had the brains or the power to raise the insurrection which he did. Absalom was evidently a fully developed man. This meant that David, as his father, was probably past the fiftieth milestone if not nearing the threescore years of age. Now, methinks, when this insurrection started, David lost all his moral backbone. I can almost hear him soliloquizing something like this:

"What is the use of my fighting? I am an old man. If I were young, as in days when I fought Goliath, I could fight now; but, old and worn out, there is not much use. I think I had better make terms. It will only be a few years at the most, and then I must die." But Joab had none of this nonsense in him. He came to the king and practically said: "Your majesty, your best days are ahead. Get up out of this nonsense and go to work. Your last years of reigning over Israel are to be your best years." My friends, my middle-aged or middle-hained brother, I bring to you Joab's salutation, 'Your best days are ahead; up and out.'

That is what your motto should be. Yea, up and out now!

You are discouraged, like David. Things have not been going right in business, have they? The younger men in the partnership want to push you to the wall? Don't you let them. Rise! Things have not been going right in the home and in the church. People say you are an old fogy and that you look at things through antiquated spectacles. Don't you let them push you aside. Live ought to be so well fitted to lead and mold the world as the mature middle-aged men are to become teachers or ministers or merchants or church members? It is a sad cry which the world is calling to-day: "Give us young men! Let us have only young men!" The voice of the church and the voice of the world should be the voice of Joab: "Give us older men for our leaders. Give us older men in the pulpit and in the pew and in legislative hall." The best days of King David were his last days. The best days of your earthly life, dear friend, are ahead, although at the present time, as with David just after Absalom's death, continual years seem to be black and almost hopeless. And I say this with the greatest confidence because I believe that the blackness and hopelessness of your present troubles will drive you closer and closer to Jesus Christ, who alone is able to fit you for service for your fellow men.

How black the world seems at times, even under the brightest of conditions! A short time before Henry Irving, the greatest actor of this generation, was to be made this statement: "With the applause of the theatre still ringing in my ears, with the memory of kindly faces emblazoned on my memory, with the consciousness that I have won the affections of many friends, I cannot meet in person. I have often gone home from the theatre feeling utterly desolate and alone, yearning for the intimate human companionship which fate has denied me."

As Henry Irving was yearning for an intimate human companionship you, on account of your troubles, have been yearning for Christ. Then, my friend, I commit you unto the hands of my Saviour. He is the Christ who will lead you if you will but let Him. He will lead you out of your troubles just as he led the king of olden times. He may not lead you by urging them to do something for some one else. It was by work that David overcame his grief, not by childish tears and sobs and weepings in the silence of his bedchamber.

But there is another fact I want you to notice about Joab's upbraidment and denunciation. He did not waste any words about other people's shortcomings. He did not go to the king and say, "Now, David, Absalom was an ungrateful dog. You ought to have hanged him long ago. A meeting for men is also advertised for Sunday at 3 p.m. There has been good attendance and interest throughout from the commencement. On Sunday last the hall was filled. Mr. Pinches spoke on Path, Presence, Prospect, taking Psalms 16, 11. He went on to speak of there being only one path, "Jesus said, I am the way", and this is the only way into His presence where sinners desire to dwell for all eternity. The striving of all to-day was to realize the prospect they have in view in this world, when most forget to entertain any thought of the great prospects for eternity, which is Heaven or Hell, there being no half way house with God —Com.

A PRETTY WEDDING.

Edmonton, Alberta, Bulletin.—The home of Mrs Caroline Purdy, corner of College avenue and First street was the scene of a very pretty wedding at high noon Nov. 26th, when Miss Catherine Purdy was united in holy bonds of matrimony to Mr. Colin Macpherson. Rev. C. H Huestis performed the ceremony. To the melodious strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march, played by Miss Battrick, the bride was led to the drawing room by her brother, Amos Purdy. She wore a beautiful bridal robe of white satin and was preceded by her maid of honor, Miss M. Purdy, who was gowned in white silk and carried a huge bouquet of pink roses. The groom was supported by Dr. Jamieson. After the bride and groom had received the good wishes and congratulations of the guests a dainty luncheon was served. Mr. and Mrs. Macpherson left on the afternoon train followed by the best wishes of many friends who will be glad to welcome them on their return. Mr. Macpherson was formerly a respected resident of the Township of Ernestown.

McCAUL—HAWLEY.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. John P. McCaul, Richmond, was the scene of a very happy event on Tuesday evening, 28th Nov., when their eldest daughter, Alma Violetta, was united in marriage to Mr. Dorman F. Hawley, of Enterprise. The ceremony was performed by Rev. W. H. Emsley, of Napanee, in the presence of over forty relatives and friends of the contracting parties. At half past seven, to the strains of a popular wedding march, well rendered by Miss Pearl Wood, of Newburgh, the bridal party entered the parlor and took their places under a beautiful arch of evergreens. The bride, who was given away by her father, was attended by her sister, Miss Ella McCaul, while Mr. Fred Hawley, brother of the groom, ably fulfilled the duties of best man. The bride was becomingly dressed in her travelling suit of brown broadcloth and white silk blouse, and carried a bouquet of white carnations and fern, while the bridesmaid wore a suit of green broadcloth and white silk blouse, and carried a bouquet of pink carnations. After the ceremony and congratulations, the guests repaired to the dining room where the tables looked beautiful adorned by large bouquets of carnations and chrysanthemums. The presents were numerous and costly, that of the groom to his bride being a pearl crescent brooch, and to the bridesmaid a gold pin set with pearls. Mr. and Mrs. Hawley took the midnight train for Watertown and other eastern points, followed by the best wishes of their many friends for a happy future.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Mr. Editor,—The experience of many of our citizens during the past few weeks in endeavoring to find their way through our darkened streets, proves conclusively the object lesson has been a very forcible one. The fact is now patent to all of the necessity for light. If the few who are opposed to it were the only ones who had occasion to go out after dark, it wouldn't be fair, but unfortunately the light house have to share the punishment with many of the unrighteous. The Council are very wisely submitting a by-law to the people, and I trust, as I understand it, to avoid the long delay which the last one occasioned, are praying for an the result of their appeal to the ratepayers at the back of the Council, and have repeatedly assured them that they will stand by them in this matter. I have confidence in the citizens that they will be as good as their word. It would be rewardly to encourage the council to go on with this work when they see them. There is only one way for the citizens to start by the Council and keep their word and that is by re-electing every man of them.

One Ingredient of Zutoo
Is soda—just old-fashioned soda, that our grandmothers took to settle the stomach.
The principal ingredient—the one that stops the headache, is a vegetable ingredient, imported for us from Japan. It wont hurt you any more than will the soda.
The other ingredients of Zutoo are just as harmless.
If you knew what the drug cures contain, and their ultimate effect on the system, you would discard them at once and take Zutoo, which is harmless as Soda.

All Run Down

This is a common expression we hear on every side. Unless there is some organic trouble, the condition can doubtless be remedied. Your doctor is the best adviser. Do not dose yourself with all kinds of advertised remedies—get his opinion. More than likely you need a concentrated fat food to enrich your blood and tone up the system.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness, caused by catarrh, that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

NAPANEE BOY HONORED.

Winnipeg Telegram, Nov. 27-h.

The gift was an especially appropriate one, Mr. and Mrs. Hamnett having been active members of the city's musical circle during their five or six years sojourn here. Mr. Hennett is severing his connection with the Ogilvie company and leaves to enter on an engagement in the office of the Leitch Bros., millers of Oak Lake.

The Kind You Have Always Bought

A SUCCESSFUL LENNOX BOY.

A few months ago Mr. Albert Close, son of the late James A. Close, of Close's Mills, North Frederickburgh, while travelling in England for a large American firm, discovered that the sea charts, in use among the steam trawlers and other deep sea fishing boats, were far behind needs of the day. Mr. Close, who is a marine and electrical engineer, set to work to try to improve them. His plans matured, he approached the large firm of Imrie, Leslie, Norie and Wilson, of London, with his new ideas, and endeavored to get them to take it up, but so conservative were they that he could scarcely get further than the doors at first, they informing him the firm had been in the business 140 years, and that he could not tell them anything new about charts.

Mr Close promptly informed them that this new chart would go through and if they wanted to embrace the opportunity of producing a good thing now was their opportunity, and if they did not take it up an American firm would. They thereupon decided to touch their charts, as they had a monopoly of all but govern ment charts. Mr. Close then approached the British Admiralty for permission to reproduce the naval charts, with his improvement, consented to do so.

To the surprise of every one, the reply came from the Admiralty saying they had no objection, and that it was at liberty to make use of the Admiralty charts for the purpose. The matter in view, and they further gave permission for a naval officer, Lieut. H Walsh, of H.M.S. "Barham," to assist on the North Sea, to thoroughly test the charts and stuff it correct. When this new chart was issued, in March, 1905, the 1st edition was sold out within a month and a second edition immediately called for and sold. It has also been widely adopted in France, and Belgium. Mr. Close expects to leave England for Germany and Holland in December to place his chart on the market there. The London firms, who had refused to take it up at first, saw the tremendous sales of the new chart, and that it was sweeping their charts off the market, they immediately stepped in the new idea possible from no new chart, without infringing on the copyright.

The leading features of Mr. Close's charts are that the courses and distances are laid down from headland to headland and light-house to light-house on the British Coasts of the North Sea, also on the coasts of the Danish, German, Dutch and French Coasts and engraving variation brought up to date. It also shows the position of sunken wrecks all over the North Sea and the fishing grounds on the same, including the famous Dogger Bank, where the Russian fleet, under Admiral Rodjestvensky fired into the Hull trawlers a year ago. Mr. Close has several other charts in other waters under way, which he expects to publish early in the spring.

GAMBLE—DELONG.

A very pleasant social event took place at the home of Mr. S. L. DeLong, Ameliasburg, on Wednesday, the occasion being the marriage of his only daughter, Mabel Blanche, to Mr. Edward Gamble, of Trenton. To the strains of the wedding march, played by Miss Hattie Brown, the wedding party took their places under the beautiful arch of evergreens decorated with the Union Jack and our Canadian ensign. The bride looked charming in a dress of white silk and carried a bouquet of white carnations, while the bridesmaid, Miss Ethel DeLong, carried a spray of red carnations. The groom was ably supported by Mr. A. B. Fife, principal of Ottawa Normal School. The marriage ceremony was performed by Rev. Dr. Metzler, in the presence of about eighty guests. The nuptial knot being tied and congratulations extended, the guests wended their way to the various dining rooms, where a dainty repast was provided and all dined sumptuously of the good things of this world. Mr. G. E. Fife entertained the audience with several high class selections on the zonophone to the delight of all. The young couple left about 5 p.m., and showers of rice confetti and other accessories, for Trenton where they took the train for Toronto where they will in future reside. The numerous presents attested the popularity of the young couple. The bride will be greatly missed by her many friends and all unite in wishing the young couple prosperity in their new home. Guests were present from Napanee, Desoronto, Trenton and different parts of the country.

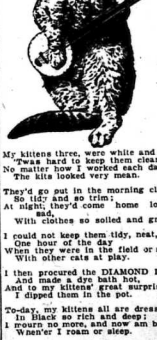
A FELINE DITTY
—ON—
DIAMOND DYES.



My kittens three, were white and gray,
'Twas hard to keep them clean;
No matter how I worked each day,
The kits looked very mean.

They'd go out in the morning clad
So tidy and so trim;
At night; they'd come home looking sad
With clothes so soiled and grim.

I could not keep them tidy, neat,
One hour of the day
While they were in the field or street,
With other cats at play.

I then procured the DIAMOND DYES,
And made a fresh bolt,
And to my kittens' great surprise,
I dipped them in the pot.

To-day, my kittens all are dressed
In black so rich and deep;
I mourn no more for days now fled
For I roam or sleep.

The moral of my song is plain,
To women bright and wise;
If you would pleasure, profit gain,
Just use the DIAMOND DYES.

BREWSTER'S MILLIONS

The letter made Brewster chafe under the bonds of inaction. His affairs were getting into a discouraging state. The illness was certain to entail a loss of more than $50,000 to his business. His only consolation came through Harrison's synopsis of the reports from Gardiner, who was managing the brief American tour of the Viennese orchestra. Quarrels and dissensions were causing everyday embarrassments, and the venture was an utter failure from a financial point of view. Broken contracts and lawsuits were turning the tour into one continuous round of riot, and poor Gardiner was on the point of despair. From the beginning apparently, the concerts had been marked for disaster. Public indifference had aroused the scorn of the local members of the orchestra, and what was imminent danger of a collapse in the organization. Gardner lived in constant fear that his troop of fifty Hungarians would finish their tour suddenly in a pitched battle with daggers and steins. Brewster shared all the thought of the practical Gardner trying to smooth down the emotions of these musicians.

Two days later Mrs. Prentiss Drew and Miss Drew registered at the Ponce de Leon, and there was much speculation upon the chances for a reconciliation.

Monty, however, maintained a stolid silence on the subject and refused to gratify the curiosity of his friends. Mrs. Drew had brought down a small crowd, including two pretty Kentucky girls and a young Chicago millionaire, who lived well and sensibly and with none of the extravagance that characterized the cottage. Yet it was inevitable that Brewster's guests should come here and join some of their gliding parties. Monty pleaded that he was not well enough to be in these excursions, but neither he nor Barbara cared to overemphasize the estrangement.

Peggy Gray was in despair over Monty's attitude. She had become convinced that behind his pride he was cherishing a secret longing for Barbara. Yet she could not see how the walls were to be broken down if he maintained this icy reserve. She was sure that the masterful one was the one to win with a girl like that, but evidently Monty would not accept advice. That he was mistaken about Barbara's feeling she did not doubt for a moment, and she saw things going hopelessly wrong for want of a word. There were times when she let herself dream of possibilities, but they always ended by seeming too impossible. She cared too much to make the attainment of her vision seem simple. She cared too much to be sure of anything.

At moments she fancied that she might say a word to Miss Drew which would straighten things out, but there was something about her which held her off. Even now that they were thrown together more or less she could not get beyond a certain barrier. It was not until a sunny day when she had accepted Barbara's invitation to drive that things seemed to go more easily. For the first time she felt the charm of the girl, and for the first time Barbara opened unreservedly friendly. It was a quiet drive they were taking through the woods and out along the beach, and somehow in the open air words simplified themselves. Finally in the softness and the idle warmth even an allusion to Monty, whose name tacitly meant an embarrassing change of subject, began to seem possible. It was inevitable that Peggy should bring it in, for with her a question of fact was never allowed to dominate when things of moment were at stake. She covered before the plunge, but she took it unafraid.

"The doctor says Monty may go out driving tomorrow," she began. "Isn't that fine?"

Barbara's only response was to touch her pony's little too sharply with the whip. Peggy went on as if unconscious of the challenge.

"He has been bored to death, poor fellow, in the house all this time, and"—

"Miss Gray, please do not mention Mr. Brewster's name to me again," interrupted Barbara, with a distinction of tone unknown. But Peggy was seized with a spirit of defiance and plunged recklessly on.

"What is the use, Miss Drew, of taking an attitude like that? I know the situation pretty well, and I can't believe that either Monty or you have lost in a week a feeling that was so deep seated. If Monty much too well to think that he would change so easily, Peggy still lived largely in her ideals. "And you are too fine a thing not to have suffered under this misunderstanding. It seems as if a very small word would set you both straight."

Barbara drew herself up and kept her eyes on the road, which lay white and gleaming in the sun. "I have not the least desire to be set straight." And she was never more serious.

"But it was only a few weeks ago that you were engaged."

"I am sorry," answered Barbara, "that it should have been talked about so much. Mr. Brewster did ask me to marry him, but I never accepted. It was only his persistence that made me consider the matter at all. I did think about it. I confess that I rather liked him. But it was not long before I found him out."

"What do you mean?" And there was a flash in Peggy's eyes. "What has he done?"

To my certain knowledge he has spent more than $400,000 since last September. That is something, is it not?" Miss Drew said in low, low, cool voice, and even Peggy's loyalty admitted some justification in the criticism.

"Generosity has ceased to be a virtue, then," she asked coldly.

"Generosity!" exclaimed Barbara sharply. "It's sheer idiocy. Haven't you heard the things people are saying? They are calling him a fool, and in the clubs they are betting that he will be a pauper within a year."

"They charitably help him to spend his money, and I have noticed that even worldly mammas find him eligible." The comment was not without its sting.

"That was months ago, my dear," protested Barbara calmly. "When he spoke to me he told me it would be impossible for him to marry within a year. And don't you see that a year may make him an abject beggar?"

"Naturally anything is preferable to a beggar," came in Peggy's clear, soft voice.

Barbara hesitated only a moment.

"Well, you must admit, Miss Gray, that it shows a shameful lack of character. How could any girl be happy with a man like that? And, after all, one must look out for one's own fate."

"Undoubtedly," replied Peggy, but many thoughts were dashing through her brain.

"Shall we turn back to the cottage?" she said after an awkward silence.

"You certainly don't approve of Mr. Brewster's conduct?" Barbara did not like to be placed in the wrong and felt that she must endeavor to justify herself. "He is the most reckless of spendthrifts, we know, and he probably indulges in even less respectable excitement."

Peggy was not tall, but she carried her head at this moment as though she were in the habit of looking down on the world.

"Aren't you going a little too far, Miss Drew?" she said placidly.

"It is not only New York that laughs over his Quixotic transactions," Barbara persisted. "Mr. Hampton, our guest from Chicago, says the stories are worse out there than they are in the east."

"It is a pity that Monty's illness should have made him so weak," said Peggy quietly as they turned in through the great iron gates, and Barbara was not slow to see the point.

CHAPTER XVII.

BREWSTER was comparatively well and strong when he returned to New York in March. His illness had interfered extensively with his plan of campaign, and it was impressive that he redoubled his efforts notwithstanding the manifest dismay of his friends. His first act was to call upon Grant & Rigley, from whom he hoped to learn why Swearengen Jones thought of his methods. The lawyers had heard no complaint from Montana and advised him to continue as he had begun, assuring him as far as they could that Jones would not prove unreasonable.

An exchange of telegrams followed Monty's interview with the head of the Rocky Mountain Railway System. It was the opinion of Brewster Monty's dread of his eccentric mentor:

New York, Jan. 6, 19—.
Swearengen Jones, Butte, Mont.: Is my insured? How about having my life insured? Would it violate conditions?
MONTGOMERY BREWSTER.

To Montgomery Brewster, New York: Depends on me your life would become an asset in that case. Can you dispose of it before Sept. 1st?
JONES.

To Swearengen Jones, Butte, Mont.: On the contrary, I think life will be a debt by that time.
MONTGOMERY BREWSTER.

To Montgomery Brewster, New York: If you feel that way about it, I advise you to take out a $50 policy.
JONES.

To Swearengen Jones, Butte, Mont.: Do you think that amount would cover funeral expenses?
MONTGOMERY BREWSTER.

To Montgomery Brewster, New York: You won't be caring about expenses if it comes to that.

The invitations for the second ball had been out for some time, and the preparations were nearly complete when Brewster arrived upon the scene of festivity. It did not surprise him that several old time friends should hunt him up and protest vigorously against the course he was pursuing, nor did it surprise him when he found that his presence was not as essential to the success of some other affair as it had once been. He was not greeted as cordially as before, and he grimly wondered how many of his friends would stand true to the end. The uncertainty made him turn more and more often to the unquestioned loyalty of Peggy Gray, and her little literary row him more frequently than for months.

Much as he had dreaded the pretentious and resplendent ball, it was useful to him in one way at least. His "profit" side of his ledger account was enlarged, and in that there was room for secret satisfaction. The Viennese orchestra struggled into New York headed by Elon Gardner, a physical wreck, in time to make a harmonious farewell appearance behind footlight palms, which caused his guests to wonder why the American public could not appreciate the real thing. A careful summing up of the expenses and receipts proved that the tour had been a bonanza for Brewster. The net loss was a trifle more than $50,000. When this story became known about town everybody laughed pityingly, and poor Gardner was almost in tears when he tried to explain the disaster to the man who lost the money. But Monty's sense of humor, singularly enough, did not desert him on this trying occasion.

Aesthetically the ball proved to be the talk of more than one season. Pettingill had justified his desire for authority and made a name which would last. He had taken matters into his own hands while Brewster was in Florida and changed the period from the Spain of Velasquez to France and Louis Quinze. After the cards were out he remembered, to his consternation, that the favors purchased for the Spanish ball would be entirely inappropriate for the French one. He wired Brewster at once of this misfortune and was astonished at the nonchalance of his reply. "But, then, Monty always was a good sort," he thought, with a glow of affection. The new plan was more costly than the old, for it was no simple matter to build a Versailles suit at Sherry's.

Pettingill was no imitator, but he created an effect which was superbly in keeping with the period he had chosen. Against it the rich costumes, with their accompaniment of wigs and powdered hair, shone out resplendent. With great difficulty the artist had secured for Monty a costume of white satin and gold, one of which might once have adorned the person of Louis himself. It made him feel like a popinjay, and it was with considerable joy and relief that he took it off an hour or so after dawn. He knew that things had gone well, that even Mrs. Dan was satisfied, but the whole affair made him heartsick. Behind the compliments lavished upon him he detected a note of irony which revealed the laughter that went on behind his back. He had not realized how much it would hurt. "For 2 cents," he thought, "I'd give up the game and be satisfied with what's left." But he reflected that such a course would offer no chance to redeem himself. Once again he took up the challenge and determined to win out. "Then," he thought exultantly, "I'll make them feel this a bit."

He longed for the time when he could take his few friends with him and sail away to the Mediterranean to escape the eyes and tongues of New York. Impatiently he urged Harrison to complete the arrangements so that they could start at once. But Harrison's face was not untroubled when he made his report. All the preliminary details had been perfected. He had taken the Flitter for four months, and it was being overhauled and put into condition for the voyage. It had been Brown's special pride, but at his death it went to heirs who were ready and eager to rent it to the highest bidder. It would not have been easy to find a handsomer yacht in New York waters. A picked crew of fifty men were under command of Captain Abner Perry. The steward was a famous manager and could be relied upon to stock the larder in a princely fashion. The boat would be in readiness to sail by the 10th of April.

"I think you are going in too heavily, Monty," protested Harrison, twisting his fingers nervously. "I can't for my life figure how you can get out for less than a f-rtune if we do everything you have in mind. Wouldn't it be better to pull up a bit? This looks like sheer madness. You won't have a dollar, Monty—honestly you won't."

"It's not in me to save money. Nopper, but if you can pull out a few dollars for yourself I shall not object."

"You told me that once before, Monty" said Harrison as he walked to the window. When he resolutely turned back again to Brewster his face was white, but there was a look of determination around the mouth.

"Monty, I've got to give up this job," he said huskily. Brewster looked up quickly.

"What do you mean, Nopper?"

"I've got to leave, that's all," said Harrison, standing stiff and straight and looking over Brewster's head.

"Good Lord, Nopper, I can't have that. You must not desert the ship. What's the matter, old chap? You're as white as a ghost. What is it?" Monty was standing now, and his hands were on Harrison's shoulders, but he felt the intensity of his look his friend's eyes fell helplessly.

"The truth is, Monty, I've taken some of your money, and I've lost it. That's the reason I—I can't stay on. I have betrayed your confidence."

"Tell me about it," and Monty was perhaps more uncomfortable than his friend. "I don't understand."

"You believed too much in me, Monty. You see, I thought I was doing you a favor. You were spending so much and getting nothing in return, and I thought I saw a chance to help you out. I went wrong, that's all, and before I could let go of the stock $60,000 of your money had gone. I can't replace it yet. But God knows I didn't mean to steal."

It made him feel like a popinjay.

"It's all right, Nopper. I see that you thought you were helping me. The money's gone, and that ends it. Don't take it so hard, old boy."

"I knew you'd act this way, but it didn't help matters. Some day I may be able to pay back the money I took, and I'm going to work until I do."

Brewster protested that he had no use for the money and begged him to retain the position of trust he had held. But Harrison had too much self respect to care to be confronted daily with the man he had wronged. Gradually Monty realized that Nopper was pursuing the most manly course open to him and gave up the effort to dissuade him. He insisted upon leaving New York, as there was no opportunity to redeem himself in the metropolis.

"I've made up my mind, Monty, to go out west—up in the mountains, perhaps. There's no telling. I may stumble on a gold mine up there—and—well, that seems to be the only chance I have to restore what I have taken from you."

"By Gate, Nopper, I have it!" cried Monty. "If you must go, I'll stake you in the hunt for gold."

In the end Nopper consented to follow Brewster's advice, and it was agreed that they should share equally all that resulted from his prospecting tour. Brewster "grub staked" him for a year, and before the end of the week a new tenderfoot was on his way to the Rocky mountains.

PROFITABLE GODLINESS
RELIGION BRINGS IN ITS TRAIN MATERIAL BLESSINGS.
APPEAL TO SELFISH MOTIVES
Spiritual Blessings Assured — Man's Interest, Both In This World and the Next, Are Served by a Godly Life—But Don't Forget That He Who Would Save His Life Must Lose It.
Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1905, by Frederick Dwight, at the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.
Los Angeles, Cal., Dec. 1.—That godliness is profitable both in this world and the next and that religion brings in its train enduring success and material as well as spiritual blessing is shown in this sermon, for which the preacher has taken as his text the story of Joseph in Genesis xxxix. 2, "And he was a prosperous man."
"Did you ever stop to think how much God appeals to the selfish motives of the children of Israel in the Old Testament?" said an aged Christian some time ago. "I am nearly eighty years of age now, but am not to old to read the Bible. So a few weeks ago, with my daughter, I started in to read it at the first chapter of Genesis and go straight through the Old Testament. Though I have read the Bible at many times before, I was never struck with this fact so much as during the last reading. All through the Old Testament and up to the time of Joshua and the Judges God keeps saying: 'Follow me, and I will increase your herds. Follow me, and I will give you land. Follow me, and I will make you a powerful people.' God seems to be appealing almost entirely to man's self interest instead of to man's duty to make sacrifices for him." "Well," I said, "that is so. I never thought of that matter before. I am going to look into it." When I went home I began to turn the leaves of my Bible, and I found what my good friend said was literally true. In that child age of the world God wooed men as we woo children. To be good with promises of reward. And he kept his promises. When the children of Israel obeyed God, then God prospered them. And when they went to worshipping false idols and disobeyed God, then God sent them wars and pestilence and famine. Right to their selfish motives in order to make them good. And yet, as I sat in my study brooding over this thought, I said to myself, 'Is it not possible to find the cause of every man's actions and deeds in a selfish motive?'"
Abraham Lincoln said, "No man ever did anything in life unless it was with a selfish motive." One day when riding about on his little six circuit with a brother lawyer he argued this question by the hour. At last the two lawyers were passing a mud hole the future President saw a little pig struggling in the mire and placed it on the solid ground. Then he mounted his horse to ride on to the next county seat. "There," said the lawyer, "Lincoln, you have disproved your own case. You say a man does nothing but with a selfish motive. What selfish motive did you have in saving that little pig?" "My motive was purely a selfish one," answered Lincoln. "I did not want to go into that puddle and get my clothes covered with mud any more than you did. But I said to myself, 'Abe, if you don't save that pig you will hear him squealing all night long, calling for help, and you won't get a wink of sleep.' I saved him in order to keep my conscience from bothering me." Like Abraham Lincoln are many of us. When we analyze our motives for doing many things we often find self interest at the bottom. It is not always pity for the sufferer that prompts the man to give to charity, but as fear of the self upbraiding we would have to endure if we refused to give. Of course this is a very low motive, but it is a very potent one with the majority of people. Now, I want to show you that even that low plane religion has claims that no one can afford to ignore. Godliness is profitable for this life right now as well as for that which is to come. Like Joseph, you want to become a prosperous man, and, like Joseph, we all want to make the best of our lives.
Every man, in the first place, wants to be financially prosperous. This does not mean that he necessarily wants to be a millionaire and have a big house, yacht and palaces scattered all over the country, like the Duke of Westminster, or a wardrobe crammed full of garments which he can never wear out, like the head of the German Empire, who has a different uniform for every corresponding with every regiment of his army and a different uniform for every day in each regiment and many of which he is an honorary colonel or admiral. That does not mean that he wants to go on hoarding up his gold until his wealth becomes so great that he does not know where to invest the superfluous capital. But it does mean that every man wishes to be financially independent. He wants to have a home over his head. He wants to be able to pay his butcher and baker and clothier's bills. He wants to be able to buy books. When his family is sick he wants to be able to hire a physician and a nurse and to have the proper medicines and delicacies for them. Now all these financial blessings are associated with the consecrated Christian life. As God cared for Joseph and clothed him and fed him and made it possible for him to get riches for his loved ones, so God will clothe and feed us and care for us if we trust him and walk in his ways.
And yet to hear some cynics talk you would suppose that great spiritual conversions inevitably goes hand in hand with financial bankruptcy. If a disciple of Jesus Christ is to be strictly honest they think he must dress in rags and have no roof which he can claim as his own. Yet the direct opposite of this supposition is true. God has promised that those who seek first the kingdom of heaven shall not lack any good thing.
Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, to-day and forever. How did God deal with his disciples in the Old Testament? Ham come before us dressed in rags? Was Joseph a bankrupt? Did Job have to beg bread at the doors of his neighbors? true to God and forgiven his three miserable friends? Did Joseph always refuse to be a herdsman, as so many times before, I was never struck with this fact so much as during the last reading. All through the Old Testament and up to the time of Joshua and the Judges God keeps saying: 'Follow me, and I will increase your herds. Follow me, and I will give you land. Follow me, and I will make you a powerful people.' God seems to be appealing almost entirely to man's self interest instead of to man's duty to make sacrifices for him." "Well," I said, "that is so. I never thought of that matter before. I am going to look into it." When I went home I began to turn the leaves of my Bible, and I found what my good friend said was literally true. In that child age of the world God wooed men as we woo children. To be good with promises of reward. And he kept his promises. When the children of Israel obeyed God, then God prospered them. And when they went to worshipping false idols and disobeyed God, then God sent them wars and pestilence and famine. Right to their selfish motives in order to make them good. And yet, as I sat in my study brooding over this thought, I said to myself, "Is it not possible to find the cause of every man's actions and deeds in a selfish motive?"
Abraham Lincoln said, "No man ever did anything in life unless it was with a selfish motive." One day when riding about on his little six circuit with a brother lawyer he argued this question by the hour. At last the two lawyers were passing a mud hole the future President saw a little pig struggling in the mire and placed it on the solid ground. Then he mounted his horse to ride on to the next county seat. "There," said the lawyer, "Lincoln, you have disproved your own case. You say a man does nothing but with a selfish motive. What selfish motive did you have in saving that little pig?" "My motive was purely a selfish one," answered Lincoln. "I did not want to go into that puddle and get my clothes covered with mud any more than you did. But I said to myself, 'Abe, if you don't save that pig you will hear him squealing all night long, calling for help, and you won't get a wink of sleep.' I saved him in order to keep my conscience from bothering me." Like Abraham Lincoln are many of us. When we analyze our motives for doing many things we often find self interest at the bottom. It is not always pity for the sufferer that prompts the man to give to charity, but as fear of the self upbraiding we would have to endure if we refused to give. Of course this is a very low motive, but it is a very potent one with the majority of people. Now, I want to show you that even that low plane religion has claims that no one can afford to ignore. Godliness is profitable for this life right now as well as for that which is to come. Like Joseph, you

Joseph, the lovable friend, for without the love of the associates with whom we are surrounded every worldly success is "as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal."
It is only by loving others that others learn to love us. Some years ago a steamer was wrecked on Lake Pontchartrain. Among the passengers was a family of six children, besides the father and mother. The father was a powerful swimmer. First he took his wife in his arms and swam toward shore. Then he came back five different times and took off a child each time. But now his strength was almost gone. Only one child remained. Only one, and yet the question was, Could he save him? The father swam out to the ship and called to his youngest boy: "Jimmie, jump! It is papa, jump!" The boy jumped into the sea. All that the father then could do was to clasp his last child in his arms and both sank together into a watery grave. You say "a sad story." Yes, but to me a beautiful story. It is the story of family devotion. It is the story of a father loving his way into the hearts of his children and of children giving back their love to the father. Such is Joseph's life to me. Wherever I turn he seems to be loving his way into the hearts of his associates. His heart seems to be so big that it can forgive every enemy and love every one, and almost very one was compelled to love him. My friends, are you like Joseph, rich in the world's affections? Do you love people? Do people love you?
But Joseph was rich also in his opportunities of doing good to others. When a child he dreamed strange dreams. He had his brothers' sheaves bowing down to worship his sheaf and his brothers' stars doing obeisance to his star. When he became a man those dreams were literally fulfilled. What happened when he became prosperous? Did he strut around the room and say: "Think of what I have accomplished! Think of how men are cringing the knee to me!" Nay. He practically made the same prayer of thanksgiving which Jenny Lind, the Swedish nightingale, made when she first found out she had a throat filled with golden and very perfect musical harmonies. He said: "Oh, God, I thank thee for the prosperity with which thou hast honored me." With my talents may I honor thee by serving my fellow men." And that is how men are classified in this selfish world.

Tonic For Horses.
Horses sometimes refuse to keep in condition, no matter how well fed. In that case the following tonic will often prove valuable: One dram calomel, one dram each of nux vomica, belladonna, and one-half ounce ginger in a pint of raw linseed oil and give a teaspoon full of Fe'ro'zo'ne three times a day.—Farm and Ranch.

The First Impression.
"Papa, what is culture?"
"Why son, it's when some people have before you know them."

WHAT CAUSES SNORING.
Were it not a people that snore breaths through the mouth instead of the nostrils, which are filled with catarrh. Just use "Catarrhozone" for a few days, "you'll quickly cure the snoring habit. By destroying the cause of catarrh and healing the membranes, Catarrhozone makes a complete cure in every case. It clears the head, stops the discharge and prevents dropping in the throat. It's very soothing so pleasant and certain to cure snoring, asthma, as "Catarrhozone—that's worth remembering.

The celebrated soprano was in the middle of her solo when little Freddie said to his mother, referring to the contortions of the orchestra, "Maw, does that man hit at the woman with his stick?" "He is not hitting her," replied his mother. "Keep quiet." "Well, then, what is she hollering for?"

"Yes," hissed the tall man at her side, bitterly. "My heart."

Feeling remorseful at having jired him so cruelly, the beautiful girl reached over and added:

"Never up, George dear! If your heart is broken we can stop at a repair shop."

"Nonsense! What kind of a repair shop could mend a broken heart?"

"Why, the parsonage, George."

Twenty minutes later the "repair shop" was reached.

NAPANEE POULTRY, PIGEON AND PET STOCK ASSOCIATION.

Marked success continues to be the lot of the Association, and a first-class Poultry Show for January 16 th, 17th and 18th, is now an assured thing. Donations of silver and bronze medals, silver spoons and cash specials continue to come in as well as many valuable prizes for special and exhibits of poultry from many outside sources.

The town and country canvas is not finished yet, but very much is completed with the big undertaking are so far well in hand. Geo. T. Walters, jr., of Trenton, will be the judge to receive membership fees.

The directory is getting very favorable replies regarding a dressed poultry market for Napanee next year, which can be realized if sufficient support is given by the producers from the county to enable the society to handle the product to advantage. A Government lecturer will be here one day in the week to visit farmers and advise on poultry raising for profit.

It may not be generally known but fact this will be likely the only poultry show to be held in Eastern Ontario at the present time, as other shows usually held is not likely to be held in Napanee.

The County Council unanimously voted $200 for the show, and more money is needed as the show will be on a large scale if support is to money collected, as so much expense has to be incurred the first year.

Bovril on the Dinner Table

Any meal is the better for the use of a little BOVRIL. It adds so much to the flavor and nutriment of so many dishes that it should be in every kitchen.

The mere odor of BOVRIL creates appetite, and it contains the nourishing element of prime beef that strengthens and builds up the system.

Here is a BOVRIL-helped dinner dish:

MILK

The interior of a cow's udder contains a marvellous collection of blood veins, milk tubes, etc.

As is known the milk secretion is largely dependent on the amount of blood passing through the udder.

If the blood circulation, the digestion and assimilation of food are good she will show a higher milk secretion, than in other wise.

a boiler, the better the condition it is in the more steam can be generated.

Clydesdale Stock Food

will stimulate the organs of circulation and digestion, because it makes the food "tasty," increasing the digestive juices that dissolve the food, and this means more milk and at a profit.

For cows at "Calving," there is nothing better as it tones and regulates the system, helping her to "clean" better, and, lessening the after fever. Can stop feeding without effect as there is nothing injurious in it. Human beings can take it with benefit. We take it every day.

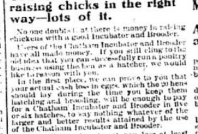
DON'T THROW MONEY AWAY



THE SETTING HEN—Her failures have discouraged many a poultry raiser.

You can make money raising chicks in the right way—lots of it.

No one doubts it if there is money in raising chickens right. It really is the right way that is the trouble. Here of the Chatham Incubator and Brooder has created a new Era in Poultry Raising. The setting Hen as a Hatcher has been proven a Commercial Failure. The Chatham Incubator and Brooder has always proved a Money Maker.

THE CHATHAM INCUBATOR—Its success has encouraged many to make more money than ever before. Bought possible out of chicks.

A Light, Pleasant and Profitable Business for Women

Many Women are today making an independent living and putting by money every month in the Poultry with a Chatham Incubator.

Any woman with a little leisure time at her disposal can, without any previous experience or without giving up her household duties, successfully and make money right from the start.

Perhaps you haven't friend who is doing so very well, so can give you the names of many who started with much misgiving only to be surprised by the ease and rapidity with which the profits came to them.

Well, success depends on getting a start right. You must begin right. You must never make any considerable money in a poultry raiser with hens and brooder, but must have a good start. Experience teaches us in the ordinary way as in everything else that you can't do much good by halves. Now here is a question in arithmetic:—

If you keep a few hens you have to feed them all winter, and how much cash do you have? Can you afford to buy eggs at 50 cents per dozen eggs, and eggs are worth 15 cents per dozen in summer.

Therefore, when the Chatham Incubator is hatching the number of eggs that is nearly best for profit, it really does not cost you over $2.00, besides producing for you nearly two hundred chicks, ready to do for you the same thing over again the moment each hatch is ready.

Don't you think it better that it pays to have these laying and let the Chatham Incubator do the hatching?

There are so many other reasons why the Chatham Incubator and Brooder is better than the setting hen.

The hen is not when she is ready. The Chatham Incubator is always ready. By planning you can have the chicks hatch right when you have plenty of broilers to sell when broilers are scarce and high in price. If you don't depend on the hen, your chicks will grow to broilers and roasters when prices are right and being marketed, and when the price is not so good.

The hen is a careless mother, often leading her chicks into cold, wet grass, and in places where rats can confiscate her young.

The Chatham Incubator behaves itself, is a perfect mother and very rarely loses a chick. Is always reliable and safe.

Altogether, there is absolutely no reasonable comparison between the best of a hen and the Chatham Incubator and Brooder.

We are making a very special offer, which it will pay you to investigate.

Small Premises Sufficient For Poultry Raising.

Of course, if you have lots of room, so much the better, but many a man and woman is successfully carrying on a most profitable poultry business in a small city or town lot. Anyone with a fairly sized garage or shed and a small yard can raise poultry profitably.

But to make money quickly, you must get away from the old idea of keeping a few hens. Start right and you will find the Chatham Incubator and Brooder a fair start in the right way in the poultry business, we make a very special offer which it is worth your while to investigate.

Our new catalogue you quickly from our distributing warehouses at Calgary, Brandon, Regina, Winnipeg, New Westminster, B.C., Montreal, Halifax, Chatham. Factories at CHATHAM, ONT., and DETROIT, MICH.

Every Farmer Should Raise Poultry

Almost every farmer "keeps hens," but while he knows that there is money to be made out of it in the business, even when setting it take care of itself, few farmers are willing to admit that they are losing every year by not getting into the poultry business more than they are now in real money out of it.

The setting hen as a hatcher will never be a commercial success. Her business is to lay eggs and she should be kept at it. The only way to raise chicks for profit is to have a good setting of Chatham Incubator and Brooder. With such a machine you can begin hatching on a large scale at any time of year.

You can only get one setting of your fields by hatching in the spring, but with a Chatham Incubator and Brooder and ordinary setting you will have a crop every month. Think of it!

Quite a few farmers have discovered that there is money in the poultry business and are turning their attention to it. Others have discovered that they have installed expensive plants that have proved a failure after trying the first.

Perhaps, after all, the trouble is, a great deal of success or a great deal of technical knowledge to raise chickens with a Chatham Incubator and Brooder. If so, you are greatly mistaken. It really is the right start, your start in the machine and look after the chickens with-out interfering with their regular household duties.

The market is always good and prices are never low. The demand is always in excess of the supply and at certain times of the year you can practically get any price you care to ask for good broilers. With a Chatham Incubator and Brooder you can start hatching at any right time to bring in cash when eggs are high and the broilers when the supply is very low and the prices accordingly high. Now, how could never do with hens as hatchers.

We know that there is money in the poultry business for every farmer that chooses to get a Chatham right. All you have to do is to get a Chatham Incubator and Brooder and start right. We can help you and we would just now to spend the money. This is why we make the special offer.

IS THIS FAIR?

We know that we are right in raising chickens. We know the Chatham Incubator and Brooder is right.

We know that with any reasonable effort on your part you can make money to amount it pays for a Chatham Incubator and Brooder.

We know that you can make a dollar after last year and that in every case the payments were taken cheerfully and promptly, and that in many cases money was accompanied by letters expressing satisfaction.

Therefore, we have no hesitation in making this proposition to every honest, earnest man or woman who may wish to add to their yearly profits without much expenditure of time and money.

This really means that we will set you up in the poultry business so that you can make money right from the start, without asking for a single cent from you until after the harvest.

If we knew of a better way we would make it.

Write us a post card with your name and address, and we will send you full particulars, as well as our beautifully illustrated book. How to make money out of chicks. Write to-day to Chatham.

YORK COUNTY LOAN.

Mr. Editor,—Several shareholders in the York County Loan and Savings Company have made enquiries from me as to what course they should pursue in the present crisis. For the benefit of all who have invested their money in this unfortunate concern, I would thank you to announce through the columns of The Beaver, that they should forward their pass books to The National Trust Company, Toronto. I would suggest that the share-holders in this vicinity hold a meeting, collect all the pass-books and send them up in one parcel by express. There is no occasion for a panic. Everything will be wound up in due form, but it will take some months to do it.

Yours truly,
W. S. HERRINGTON.

STRATHCONA.

The beautiful weather cheers people with thoughts of an open winter.

One of the saddest deaths that has occurred here for some time, was that of Mrs. E. J. Rook, aged 45 years. She had been ill but two or three weeks. During the last week her suffering was very great indeed, though all that care and medical skill could do was done. Mrs. Rook was the late Jenkins, who came from Ireland to this country several years ago. A brother and sister were here before she came. She was married to her now sorrowing husband some fifteen years ago. She was one of the social centres of the neighborhood, and will be sadly missed. Of an extremely cheerful temperament, she was the life of any gathering where she was present. She was ever kind, sympathetic and charitable. Where shall we find her like again? Everyone seems stunned and shocked by her death. The funeral service was conducted by Rev. J. E. Mears, on Tuesday, and was largely attended. The service was held at the house. Deceased leaves a bereaved husband and an only son, about ten years. Her sister-in-law, Mrs. Robt. Jenkins, died about two years ago, which one felt extremely and probably hastened her end.

COUNTESS OF MINTO

One of Canada's Popular Vicereines.

Rideau Hall, the simple, unimposing yet comfortable official residence of the Governor-General of Canada is a two-story, long, low villa-like house, with its eighty-seven acres of ground, and was built in 1838 and bought by the Government forty years later. It has been fortunate in its tenants, and one of the most popular of the vicereines who has dispensed gracious hospitality within its walls is Lady Minto, sister of Earl Grey.

The youngest daughter of the late General, the Honorable Charles Grey, she was born in 1858 and when twenty-five was married to Viscount Melgund who succeeded as fourth Earl of Minto in 1891. Her close and affectionate relation to Canada dates from a time shortly after her marriage, on her husband's appointment as Militia Secretary-to the Marquis of Lansdowne, then the Governor-General, little dreaming that within a few years he himself would occupy the exalted position of viceroy. In 1896 the Minto returned to England and twelve years later came back to Ottawa as the representatives of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, in Canada.

An excellent housekeeper, a wise and devoted mother, and a charming hostess was Lady Minto. On coming to Rideau Hall she had it transformed by a thorough renovating and re-decorating, and at such small expense that the department of public works expressed delight at the marvel of results for a minimum of cost. The tradespeople protested against the careful marketing of the household, which though ever ample, had no trace of the wasteful extravagance of other vicegal regimes. The home-like air the Hall was simple, and the happy laughter of the five children was never hushed. The training of the young people was unlike that common in English families of rank; they were the close comrades of their parents, and a free natural companionship were present at all social affairs at Government House except the formal functions of State.

The public benevolence of Lady Minto centered chiefly in her splendid work for the Victorian Order of Nurses, and through her inspiration and initiative numerous cottage hospitals have been established in sparsely settled districts where they were greatly needed. Her purse is ever open to works for the betterment of humanity, and her heart, head and hand cooperate in her charities. The plans for beautifying the city by stimulating the individual action of its citizens once more Lady Minto's offer of prizes for the most attractive lawns and gardens. Tall, stately, with a rare charm that pervades her presence like some delicate perfume, she impressed her personality on a large list of Canadian friends and admirers who will ever remember her most kindly.

Entered according to Act of the Parliament of Canada, in the year 1905, by W. T. R. Preston, at the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa.

NEWBURGH.

The Epworth League concert in Pinkie's Hall on Monday evening, was one of the successes of the year. The hall was packed by a fine and appreciative audience, and the order throughout the evening was of the best. The general opinion was that a better programme has not been given here in years. D. A. Nesbit presided in his usual pleasing way. Miss Young opened with a piano solo, and her work as accompanist during the evening was strictly first-class. Mrs. Mears and Miss Wood sang, 'Gently Blow the Breeze,' and Wm. Hedley was heard in a solo, "Haulee-Ho!" Mrs. Pinkie always a favorite, delighted the audience in her solo, "O Dry Those Tears." Two fancy drills were greatly appreciated. One of the features of the evening was "Three Young Maids," by Misses Scriver, Wood and Herman. As for Cameron, the entertainer, he was all that was promised. The songs were fine, particularly "Ain't it funny what a difference just a few hours make," and "I'm a little too old for that, now." He gave two readings, "Wounded," and "A Race," the latter winning great applause and favor. We doubt if a finer entertainment has ever been heard in Newburgh. He has a very pleasing stage appearance, a good voice, and knows how to tell his story. He is sure to be encouraged if ever he comes back. The receipts were $141.

A wedding which will be of interest to people of this village was solemnized in Utica last week, Miss Florence Jenkins, formerly of Newburgh, and Emil E. Christall being the contracting parties. The bride's many friends in this village extend their congratulations.

A Run-Down Woman

Made Well by

Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women

Miss Jennie Thomas, of Dixville, Que., was in a run-down condition — tired, and all dragged out. Thousands of women know just how she felt.

She was given a box of Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women by her family physician. She took them two weeks and then wrote us in these words:

"I have received such great benefit from taking your tablets, I desire to continue taking them two weeks longer. The benefit secured from the one box has been so great, and I feel so much better now, I am satisfied only one box more will be necessary to effect what I want of your tablets, that is, make me again a healthy woman."

She took the second box. She took them and has since assured us of perfect restoration to health.

And they are doing this for women all the time. Every day we receive letters from grateful women, testifying to their gain in health since taking these tablets.

If you are in a run-down condition, or suffer from any weakness peculiar to your sex, they will restore you to perfect health. They make healthy women.

But you must do as Mrs. Thomas did—take the tablets. You ask without improvement the first week.

NEW BOOKS IN PUBLIC LIBRARY.

There has been recently added to the books of reference the new Encyclopaedia Americana. This is the most complete work of its kind ever published and for the convenience of subscribers has been placed in the reading room. A complete set of President Koenig's works is also upon the counter and will be found to be very entertaining reading. The board has been at work during the past month making selection of new books which will be put into circulation at once. A card of membership for the library would be a nice Christmas present to give a friend. Some members have been remembering their employees in this way and the practice is most commendable.

Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

PUBLIC LIBRARY

The Board of the Public Library have just completed their labors in selecting books and magazines, and the new purchases will be put into immediate circulation. It is safe to say that no town in the Province of the size of ours possesses a library that contains such a wealth of good reading matter. The reference library, which is not small as much as it ought to be, is particularly well supplied with encyclopaedias from which one can gather most special information upon almost any subject. There are Encyclopaedias of Science, History and Literature, whereas the general encyclopaedias such as the Britannica and the Americana. Several additions have been made to the magazines and periodicals. The circulating library containing the latest and best publications, and will be found to be very complete. It is fear ed that a great many citizens are not contributing towards the library as they should. No one should begrudge the small sum of one dollar. In fact it is a mere trifle for the great privileges afforded. This small sum brings the library within the reach of all, but those who can afford it might contribute two, three or five dollars annually, towards the support of such a deserving institution. It is to be hoped that the library will not be forgotten while the Christmas gifts are being distributed. The Board is now making an appeal for assistance, and we feel confident that it will be heartily responded to. When we compare the present library to what it was few years ago, we should not hesitate to do our part to help the Board to keep it up to its present state of efficiency. Remember the Public Library.

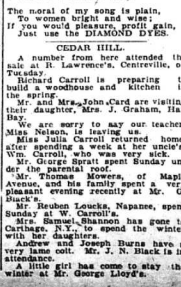
A FELINE DITTY

ON

DIAMOND DYES.



My kittens three, were white and gray, And they were all the joy of mine, No matter how I worked each day, The kits looked very mean.

They'd go out in the morning clad So tidy and so trim, At night, they'd come home looking sad, With clothes so soiled au grim.

I could not keep them tidy, neat, I hour of the day When they were in the field or street, Which grieved me at play.

I then procured the DIAMOND DYES, And made a dye bath hot, And to my kittens' great surprise, I dipped them in the pot.

To-day, my kittens all are dressed In black so rich and deep; I mourn no more the grim unblessed When'er I roam or sleep.

The moral of my song is plain, To every household dear, If you would please, profit gain, Just use the DIAMOND DYES.

Poultry raising pays.

People who tell you that there is no money in raising chicks may have tried to make money in the business by using setting hens as hatchers, and they might as well have tried to locate a gold mine in the cabbage patch. The business of a hen is—to lay eggs. As a hatcher and brooder she is outclassed. That's the business of the Chatham Incubator and Brooder, and they do it perfectly and successfully.

The poultry business, properly conducted, pays far better than any other business for the amount of time and money invested.

Thousands of poultry-raisers—men and women all over Canada and the United States—have proved by their satisfaction that it is profitable to raise chicks with the

BREWSTER'S MILLIONS

CHAPTER XVIII.

HARRISON S. departure left Brewster in no sure straits. It forced him to settle down to the actual management of his own affairs. He was not indolent, but this was not the kind of work he cared to undertake. The private accounts he had kept revealed some appalling facts when he went over them carefully one morning at 4 o'clock after an all night session with the ledger. With infinite pains he had managed to rise to something over $450,000 in six months. But this original million it had been necessary to add $58,550 which he had realized from Lumber and Fuel and some of his other "unfortunate" operations. At least $40,000 would come to him ultimately through the sale of furniture and other belongings, and even there would be something like $5,000 interest to consider.

But luck had aided him in getting rid of his money. The bank failure had cost him $113,468.75, and Nopper Harrison had helped him to the extent of $30,000. The reckless but determined effort to give a ball had cost $30,000 what he had lost during his illness had been pretty well offset by the unlucky desert tour. The Florida trip, including medical attention, the cottage and living expenses, had entailed the expenditure of $18,500, and his princely dinners and theater parties had footed up $23,000. Taking all the facts into consideration, he felt that he had done rather well as far as he had gone, but the hardest part of the undertaking was yet to come. He was still in possession of an enormous sum which must disappear before Sept. 23. About $200,000 had already been expended in the building project.

He determined to begin at once a system of extinction. It had not been his intention before sailing to dispose of many household articles either by sale or gift. As he did not expect to go to New York before the 1st of August the time would minimize the chances of the last month. But the respective "profit" to be acquired in keeping his apartment open was not to be overlooked. He would expend a liberal sum for salaries and running expenses. Once on the other side of the Atlantic he hoped that opportunities for extravagance would present themselves, and he fancied he could leave the final settlement of his affairs for the last month. As the day for sailing approached the task again seemed trifling to the "insignificant" of speechifying.

A farewell consultation with his attorney's staff, encouraging, for to begin in names, to the effect that the many oldest settled of the best. He was in high spirits as he left them, exhilarated by the sensation that the world lay before him. In the cab, on the chosen, cried Colonel Prentiss Brew. On both sides the meeting was of without its difficulties. The colonel had been dazed by the inexplicable attitude between Monty and his daughter, whose involutions he found hard to understand. His summary of the effort she had made to effect a reconciliation after hearing the story of the bank was rather vague. She had, after her grilling, said she would be free to him and make him feel that she appreciated his generosity, but he took it to the most disagreeable fashion. Colonel Brew knew that things were somehow wrong, but he was too strongly an American father to interfere in a matter of the affections. It distressed him, for he had a liking for Monty, and Barbara's "society judgments," as he called them, had no weight with him. When he found himself confronted with Brewster in the elevator the old warmth revived and the old hope that the quarrel might have an end. His greeting was hearty.

"You have not forgotten, Brewster," he said as they shook hands, "that you have a dollar or two with us?"

"No," said Monty, "not exactly. And I shall be calling upon you for some of it very soon. I'm off on Thursday for cruise in the Mediterranean."

He heard 'something of it." They had reached the main floor, and Colonel Brew had drawn his companion out of the crowd into the rotunda. "The story is at your disposal at any moment. But aren't you setting a pretty high pace, my boy? You know I've always liked you, and I knew your father rather well. He was a jolly old chap, Monty, and he would like to see you make ducks and drakes of his fortune."

There was something in the colonel's manner that softened Brewster, much as he hated to take a reproof from Barbara's father. Once again he was tempted to tell the truth, but he pulled himself up in time. "It's a funny old world, colonel," he said, "and sometimes one's nearest friend is a stranger. I know I seem a fool; but, after all, there isn't it good philosophy to make the most of a holiday and then settle down to work?"

"That is all very well, Monty"—and Colonel Brew was entirely serious—"but the work is a hundred times harder after you have reached the limit. You'll find that you are way beyond it. There's no joke getting back into the harness."

"Perhaps you are right, colonel, but at least I shall have something to look back upon even if the worst comes." And Monty instinctively straightened his shoulders.

They turned to leave the building, and the colonel had a moment of weakness.

"Do you know, Monty," he said, "my daughter is awfully cut up about this business. She is plucky and tries not to show it, but, after all, a girl doesn't get over that sort of thing all in a moment. I am not saying"—it seemed necessary to recede a step—"that it would be an easy matter to patch up. But I like you, Monty, and if any man could do it you can."

"Colonel, I wish I might," And Brewster found that he did not hesitate. "For your sake I very much wish the situation were as simple as it seems. But there are some things a man can't forget, and—well, Barbara has shown in a dozen ways that she has no faith in me."

"Well, I've got faith in you, and a lot of it. Take care of yourself, and when you get back you can count on me. Goodby."

On Thursday morning the Flitter steamed off down the bay, and the flight of the prodigal grandson was on. No swifter, cleaner, handsomer boat ever sailed out of the harbor of New York, and it was a merry crowd that she carried out to sea. Brewster's guests numbered twenty-five, and they brought with them a liberal supply of maids, valets and luggage. It was not until many weeks later that he read the vivid descriptions of the weighing of the anchor which were printed in the New York papers, but by that time he was impervious to their ridicule.

On deck, standing like rugged silhouette of the city disappear into the mists, were Dan DeMille and Mrs. Dan, Peggy Gray, Rip Van Winkle, Reginald Vanderpool, Joe Braydon, Dr. Lotless and his sister Isabel, Mr. and Mrs. Valentine—the official chaperon—and their daughter Mary, Subway Smith, Paul Bettigrid and some others hardly less distinguished. As Monty looked over the eager crowd he recognized with a peculiar glow that here were represented his best and truest friendships. The loyalty of these companions had been tested, and he knew that they would stand by him through everything.

There was no little surprise when it was learned that Dan DeMille was really to sail. Many of the idle voyagers ventured the opinion that he would try to desert the boat in mid-ocean if he saw a chance to get back to his club on a westbound steamer. But DeMille, big, indolent and indifferent, smiled carelessly and hoped he wouldn't bother anybody if he "stuck to the ship" until the end.

For a time the sea and the sky and the talk of the crowd were enough for the joy of living. But after a few peaceful days there was a lull, and it was then that Monty gained the nickname of Aladdin, which clung to him. From somewhere, from the hold or the rigging or from under the sea, he brought forth four darkies from the south who strummed banjos and sang ragtime melodies. More than once during the voyage they were useful.

"Peggy," said Brewster one day when the sky was particularly clear and things were quiet on deck, "on the whole I prefer this to crossing the North river on a ferry. I rather like it, don't you?"

"It seems like a dream," she cried, her eyes bright, her hair blowing in the breeze.

"And, Peggy, do you know what I tucked away in a chest down in my cabin? A lot of books that you like—some from the old garret. I've saved them to read on rainy days."

Peggy did not speak, but the blood began to creep into her face, and she looked wistfully across the water. Then she smiled.

"I didn't know you could save anything," she said weakly.

"Come now, Peggy; that is too much."

"I didn't mean to hurt you. But you must not forget, Monty, that there are other years to follow this one. Do you know what I mean?"

"Peggy, dear, please don't lecture me," he begged so piteously that she could not be serious.

"The class is dismissed for today, Monty," she said airily. "But the professor knows his duty and won't let you off so easily next time."

CHAPTER XIX.

A Gibraltar Monty was handed an ominous looking cablegram, which he opened trembligly:

To Montgomery Brewster, Private Yacht Flitter, Gibraltar:
There is an agitation to declare for free silver. You may have twice as much to spend. Hooray!
JONES.

To which Monty responded:
Defeat the measure at any cost. The more the merrier and charge it to me.
BREWSTER.

P. S.—Please send many cables and mark them collect.

The Riviera season was fast closing, and the possibilities suggested by Monte Carlo were too alluring to the host to admit of a long stop at Gibraltar. But the DeMilles had letters to one of the officers of the garrison, and Brewster could not overlook the opportunity to give an elaborate dinner. The success of the affair may best be judged by the fact that the Flitter's larder required an entirely new stock the next day. The officers' ladies of the garrison were asked, and Monty would have entertained the entire regiment with beer and sandwiches if his friends had not interfered.

"It might cement the Anglo-American alliance," argued Gardner, "but your pocketbook needs cementing a bit more."

Yet the pocketbook was very wide open, and Gardner's only consolation lay in a tall English girl whom he took out to dinner. For the others there were many compunctions, as the affair was brilliant and the new element a pleasant relief from the inevitable monotony.

The Flitter saw some rough weather in making the trip across the bay of Lyons. She was heading for Nice when an incident occurred that created the first real excitement experienced on the voyage. A group of passengers in the main saloon was discussing more or less steadily Monty's "misdemeanors" when Reggy Vanderpool sauntered lazily in, his face displaying the only sign of interest it had shown in days.

"Funny predicament I was just in," he drawled. "I want to ask what a fellow should have done under the circumstances."

"I'd have refused the girl," observed Rip Van Winkle laconically.

"Girl had nothing to do with it, old chap," went on Reggy, dropping into a chair. "Fellow fell overboard a little while ago," he went on calmly. There was a chorus of cries, and Brewster was forgotten for a time. "One of the sailors, you know. He was doing something in the rigging near where I was standing. Puff of air went into the sea, and there he was puttering around in the water."

"Oh, the poor fellow!" cried Miss Valentine.

"I'd never set eyes on him before—perfect stranger. I wouldn't have hesitated a minute, but the deck was crowded with a lot of his friends. One chap was his bunkie. So, really now, it wasn't my place to jump in after him. He could swim a bit, and I rolled to him to hold up and I'd tell the captain. Confounded captain wasn't to be found, though. Somebody said he was asleep. In the end I told the mate. By this time we were a mile away from the place where he went overboard, and I told the mate I didn't think we could find him if we went back. But he lowered some boats, and they cut back fast. Afterward I got to thinking about the matter. Of course if I had known him—if he had been one of you—it would have been different."

"And you were the best swimmer in college, you miserable rat!" exploded Dr. Lotless.

There was a wild rush for the upper deck, and Vanderpool was not the hero of the hour. The Flitter had turned and was steaming back over her course. Two small boats were racing to the place where Reggy's unknown had gone over.

"Where is Brewster?" shouted Joe Braydon.

"I can't find him, sir," answered the first mate.

"He ought to know of this," cried Mr. Valentine.

"There! They are picking something body over yonder," exclaimed the mate. "See! That first boat has laid to and they are dragging. Yes, sir, he's saved!"

A cheer went up on board and the men in the small boats waved their caps in response. Everybody rushed to the rail as the Flitter drew up to the boats, and there was intense excitement on board. A gasp of amazement went up from every one.

Monty Brewster, drenched, but smiling, sat in one of the boats, and leaning limply against him, his head on his chest, was the sailor who had fallen overboard. Brewster had seen the man in the water and, instead of wondering what his antecedents were, leaped to his assistance. When the boat reached him his unconscious burden was a dead weight and his own strength was almost gone. Another minute or two and both would have gone to the bottom.

As they landed Monty over the side he shivered for an instant, grasped the first little hand that sought his so frantically and then turned to look upon the half dead sailor.

"Find out that boy's name, Mr. Abertz, and see that he has the best of care. Just before he fainted out there was something about his mother. He wasn't thinking of himself even then, you see. And, Braydon"—this in an aside voice—"will you see that his wages are properly increased? Hello, Peggy! Look out, you'll get wet to the skin if you do that."

If Brewster had had any misgivings about his ability to dispose of the balance of his fortune they were dispelled very soon after his party landed in the Riviera. On the pretext that the yacht required a thorough "house cleaning" Brewster transferred his guests to the hotel of a fascinating village which was near the sea and yet quite out of the world. The place was nearly empty at the time, and the proprietor wept tears of joy when Monty engaged for his party the entire first floor of the house, with balconies overlooking the blue Mediterranean and a separate dining room and salon. Extra servants were summoned, and the Brewster livery was soon a familiar sight about the village. The protests of Peggy and the others were only silenced when Monty threatened to rent a villa and go to housekeeping.

The town quickly took on the appearance of entertaining a royal visitor, and a number of shops were kept open longer than usual in the hope that their owners might catch some of the American's money. One morning Philippe, the hotel proprietor, was trying to impress Brewster with a gesticulatory description of the glories of the Carnaille de fleurs. It seemed quite impossible to express the extent of his regret that the party had not arrived in time to see it.

"This is quite another place at that time," he said ecstatically. "It is magnificent! It is superb! If monsieur had only seen it!"

"Why not have another all to ourselves?" asked Monty. But the suggestion was not taken seriously.

Nevertheless the young American and his host were in secret session for the rest of the morning, and when the result was announced at luncheon there was general consternation. It appeared that ten days later occurred the fete day of some minor saint who had not for years been accorded the honor of a celebration. Monty proposed to revive the custom by arranging a second carnival.

Monty turned to look upon the half dead sailor.

"You might just as well not come to the Riviera at all," he explained, "if you can't see a carnival. It's a simple matter, really. I offer one prize for the best decorated carriage and another to the handsomest lady. Then every one puts on a domino and a mask, throws confetti at every one else, and there you are."

"I suppose you will have the confetti made of thousand franc notes and offer a house and lot as a prize." And Braydon feared that his sarcasm was almost insulting.

"Really, Monty, the scheme is ridiculous," said DeMille. "The police won't allow it."

"Won't they, though!" said Monty excultingly. "The chief happens to be Philippe's brother-in-law, and we had him on the telephone. He wouldn't listen to the scheme until we agreed to make him grand marshal of the parade. Then he promised the co-operation of the entire force and hoped to interest his colleague, the chief of the fire department."

"The parade will consist of two gendarmes and the Brewster party in carriages," laughed Mrs. Dan. "Do you expect us to go before or after the bakers' carts?"

"We review the procession from the hotel," said Monty. "You needn't worry about the fete. It's going to be great. Why, a Irishman isn't fonder of marching than these people are of having a carnival."

The men in the party went into executive session as soon as Monty had gone to interview the local authorities and seriously considered taking measures to subdue their host's eccentricities, but the humor of the scheme appealed to them too forcibly, and almost before they knew it they were making plans for the carnival.

"Of course we can't let him do it, but it would be sport," said Subway Smith. "Think of a cavalcade between policemen and laundresses!"

"I always feel devilish the moment I get a mask on," said Vanderpool, "and you know by Jove, I haven't felt that way for years."

"That settles it, then," said DeMille. "Monty would quit it of himself if he knew how it would affect Reggie."

Monty returned with the announcement that the mayor of the town would declare a holiday if the American could see his way to pay for the repairs on the mairie roof. A circus which was traveling in the neighborhood was guaranteed expenses if it would stop over and occupy the square in front of the Hotel de Ville. Brewster's enthusiasm was such that no one dared resist helping him, and for nearly a week his friends were occupied in superintending the erection of triumphal arches, directing the shopkeepers to do their best. Although the scheme had been conceived in the spirit of a joke, it was not so with the people of the townspeople. They were quite serious in the matter. The railroad officials sent advertisements broadcast, and the local wire ran from Nice to Brewster for resurrecting, as it were, the obscure saint. The expression of his gratitude was so mingled with fervency and appeal that Monty could not overlook the hint that a new altar piece had long been needed.

CHAPTER XX.

THE great day finally arrived, and no carnival could have been more successful. The morning parade was to take the form of a side shows. The firemen won the tug of war, and the people marveled when Monty duplicated the feats of the street fakirs. The chief of police was called upon for a speech, but, knowing only ten words of French, he graciously retired in favor of the mayor, and that pompous little man made the most of a rare opportunity. References to Franklin and Lafayette were so frequent that Subway Smith insisted that a rubber stamp must have been used in writing the address.

The parade took place in the afternoon and proved quite the feature of the day. The question of precedence nearly overturned Monty's plans, but the chief of police was finally made to see that he were to be simply marshal it was only fair that the firemen should march ahead of the police. The crew of the Flitter made a wonderful showing. It was led by the yacht's band, which fairly outdid Sousa in noise, though it was less unanimous in the matter of time. The gendarmes came at the end, but there were so many of them and the line of march was so short that at times they were really leading the procession, despite the gallant efforts of the grand marshal.

From the balcony of the hotel Monty and his party pelted those below with confetti and flowers. More allusions to Franklin and Lafayette were made when the cure and the mayor halted the procession and presented Monty with an address richly engrossed on imitation parchment. Then the school children sang, and the crowd dispersed to meet again in the evening.

At 8 o'clock Brewster presided over a large banquet and numbered among his guests every one of distinction in the place. The mayor was also invited, and Franklin and Lafayette were again alluded to. Each of the men made at least one speech, but Subway Smith's third address was his best of the evening. Knowing nothing but English, he had previously clung consistently to that language, and the effect of his last address seemed to demand something more friendly and genial. With a sweeping bow and with all the dignity of a diplomatic envoy:

"Mesdames et messieurs, j'ai, tu as, il a, nous avons"—with a magnificent gesture—"beaucoup!" The French members of the company were not equal to his pronunciation and were under the impression that he was still talking English. They were profoundly impressed with his deference and grace and accorded his preamble a round of applause. The Americans did their utmost to maintain him to be seated, but their uproar was mistaken by the others for enthusiasm, and the applause grew louder than ever. Subway held up his hand for silence, and his manner suggested that he was about to utter some peculiarly important thought. There was a pin fall could have been heard before he went on.

"Maitre Corbeau sur un arbre perche"— He finished the speech as he was being carried bodily from the room by DeMille and Braydon. The Frenchmen then imagined that Smith's remarks had been translated in a pin and friends had silenced him on that account. A riot seemed imminent when Monty succeeded in restoring silence and with a few terse remarks had both Franklin and Lafayette quieted the excited guests.

The evening ended with fireworks and a dance in the open air—a dance that grew gay under the masks. The wheels had been well oiled, and there was no visible failure in the festive spirit. To Brewster it seemed a mad game, and he found it less easy to play a part behind the foolish mask than he expected. His own friends seemed to elude him, and the coquetries of the village damsels had merely a fleeting charm. He was standing apart to watch the glimmering crowd when he was startled by a smothered cry. Turning to investigate, he discovered a little red domino, unmistakably frightened and trying to release herself from a too ardent Punchinello. Monty's arrival prevented him from tearing off the girl's mask and gave him an entirely new conception of the strenuous life. He arose fuming and sputtering, but he was taken in hand by the crowd and whirled from one to another in whimsical mockery. Meanwhile Monty, unconscious that his mask had dropped during the encounter, was astonished to feel the little hand of the red domino on his arm and to hear a voice not at all unfamiliar in his ear.

"Monty, you are a dear. I love you for that. You looked like a Greek athlete. Do you know—it was foolish—but I really was frightened."

"Child, how could it have happened?" he whispered, leading her away. "Fancy my little Peggy with no one to look after her. What a beast I was to trust you to Pettingill. I might have known the chump would have been knocked out by all this color." He stopped to look down at her, and a light came into his eyes. "Little Peggy in the great world," he smiled; "you are not fit. You need—well, you need—just me."

But Mrs. Valentine had seen him as he stood revealed and came up in search of Peggy. It was almost morning, she told her, and quite time to go back to the hotel and sleep. So in Braydon's charge they wandered off, a bit reluctantly, a bit fingerfully.

It was not until Monty was summoned to rescue Reggie Vanderpool from the stern arm of the law that he discovered the identity of Punchinello. Manifestly he had not been in a condition to recognize his assailant, and a flash of pugnacious resentment had driven the rest out of his head. The poor boy was badly bruised about the face, and his arrest had probably saved him from worse punishment.

"I told you I couldn't wear a mask," he explained ruefully as Monty led him home. "But how could I know that he could hear me all the time?"

The day after the carnival Brewster drove his guests over to Monte Carlo. He meant to stay only long enough to try his luck at the tables and lose enough to make up for the days at sea when his purse was necessarily idle. Swearengen Jones was forgotten, and soon after his arrival he began to plunge. At first he lost heavily, and it was with difficulty that he concealed his joy. Peggy Gray was watching him and in whispers implored him to stop, but Mrs. Dan excitedly urged him to continue until his luck changed. To the girl's chagrin it was the more reckless advice that he followed. In the course of a few hours it felt that he could not stop. But his luck turned too soon.

"I can't afford to give up," he said miserably to himself after a time. "I'm already a winner by $5,000, and I must at least get rid of that."

Brewster became the center of interest to those who were not playing, and people marveled at his luck. They quite misinterpreted his eagerness and his nervous excitement. When he left the table he followed each spin of the wheel. He had chosen a seat beside an English duchess whose practice it was to appropriate the winnings of the more inexperienced players, and he was aware that many of his gold pieces were being deliberately stolen. Here, he thought, was at least a helping hand, and he was on the point of moving his stack toward her side when DeMille interfered. He had watched the duchess and had called the croupier's attention to her neat little method. But that austere individual silenced him by saying in surprise, "But she's a duchess—what do you expect?"

Not to be downed so easily, DeMille watched the play from behind Monty's chair and cautioned his friend at the first opportunity.

"Better cash in and change your seat, Monty. They're robbing you," he whispered.

"Cash in when I'm away ahead of the game? Never!" and Monty did his best to assume a jovial tone.

At first he played with no effort at system, piling his money flat on the numbers which seemed to have least chance of winning, but he simply could not lose. Then he tried to reverse different systems he had heard of, but they turned out to be winners. Finally in desperation he began doubling on one color in the hope that he would surely lose in the end, but his particular fate was against him. With his entire stake on the red, the ball continued to fall in the red holes until the croupier announced that the bank was broken.

Dan DeMille gathered in the money and counted $40,000 before he handed it to Monty. His friends were overjoyed when he left the table and wondered why he looked so downhearted. Inwardly he berated himself for not taking Peggy's advice.

"I'm so glad for your sake that you did not stop when I asked you, Monty, but your luck does not change my belief that gambling is next to stealing." Peggy was constrained to say as they went to supper.

"I wish I had taken your advice," he said gloomily.

"And missed the fortune you have won? How foolish of you, Monty! You were a winner by several thousand dollars then," she objected, with whimsical inconsistency.

CHRISTMAS

"And the angel said unto them: Fear not, for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Luke 2:10.

All ye who love to soul to stray
Amongst scenes of joy and heavenly light,
Come for awhile and soar away
To Bethlehem's plains with me to-night.
Near Hebron's brook behold, we stand
And view the twinkling stars above;
Feeling all—effulgent—grand
We see the Star of Peace and Love
To mingled esctasies sky above.

And as its glorious light displays
To us the shepherds, sheep and fold,
We list to songs of hopeful days,
By holy prophets oft foretold;
We see the sages hasten by
With eyes fixed on the beacon bright
We hear the watcher's plaintive cry
As morning wakes, dispelling night
The Star speeds onward in its flight.

Behold, it stops, with brilliant rays,
Right over the Wayside Inn it shines;
Hark! hear we now the joyful lays Poured forth along angelic lines?
While weeping over the sacred plains
And halos bright their crowns adorn,
From tiny throats in unseen strains
This first and hallowed Christmas morn:
"To you a Saviour now is born."

We bring glad tidings" they proclaim
"Fear not," they are for you, for all.
Again forth the high anthem
"Behold the Babe in yonder stall."
No canopy of purple hue
Or hangs the darling Saviour's bed
Source to protect Him from the dew
In manger rests His kingly head
And holy tears the angels shed.

We hasten now, the brook forsake,
And in the sacked cave behold
The wise their meek obeisance make
And offer precious gifts and gold;
While angels choristers resound
The praises of their gracious King,
Their hearts and lips with love abound.
As to their harps ten thousand sing
All glory to our God and King."

O wondrous God, thy saving plan
We scan, but cannot fathom all.
Our puny thoughts we often fan
To reach beyond this spinning ball,
Our littleness we own to Thee
And bless Thee for another morn
When we may hear the same sweet glee,
Heard long ago on Christmas morn:
"To you a Saviour now is born."

CARING FOR A CHILD.

Mrs. J. Babcock, Hawley, was at the police station, Kingston, last Saturday seeking the advice and aid of the police in placing a three-year-old boy, Raymond Smith, in the Infants' Home. The story as it unfolded was a strange one. In July, of this year, the woman took the child from the home to care for it, but she finds now she is unable to support it. The little fellow's parents are alive. The whereabouts of the father, Peter Smith, employed last year in the Kingston foundry, are unknown. The mother lives near Fredericksburgh. Mrs. Babcock says Mrs. Smith or Richards has had three husbands.

Mrs. Babcock unfolded her tale to Magistrate Farrell, and she was finally given a letter to readmit the child to the Infants' Home as he was not under three years of age.—Whig.

FINDS NEW BIBLE HERO

JOSEPH, HUSBAND OF MARY, OF WHOM JESUS WAS BORN.

INSPIRATION FOR PARENTS

Unique Study of the Life and Character of the Nazarene Carpenter — Noble and Manly Personality—The Struggle for Bread Deepened Saviour's Knowledge and Sympathy—The Influence of a Good Man.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1905, by the Department of Agriculture, at the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Dec. 17.—This is a unique study of the life and character of Joseph the carpenter, in whose example the preacher finds a lesson of inspiration for all husbands and parents. The text is Matthew 1, 16, "Joseph, the husband of Mary, of whom was born Jesus."

Amazing it is to read the reviews of the latest books of our prominent novelists. It seems as though we are perusing the columns of a realistic review or are reading the resume of the sermons of ministers written in a religious weekly instead of a summary of the imaginative works of our secular writers. The novelists's fad of finding his heroes and heroines among the east-ern walls of chivalric times has to a great extent passed away. Our modern thinkers are not searching among the smoke and the tottering walls of a licentious Pompeii to find out their blinded deities. Our Charles Kingsleys are not romping about the edge of a Sahara to find the footprints of a beautiful heathen celibate. Hypatia by name. Our brilliant Sir Walter Scotts are not turning the rolls of a Kenilworth Castle into a gorgeous banquet hall where the rival earls of a mighty kingdom are rising side by side to drink the health of a virgin queen. But a large percentage of our modern novelists are finding the scenic settings for their most powerful chapters among the Judaean hills or by the placid waters of Lake Galilee or down among the vine-clad valleys of a Samaritan capital.

Yes, the Biblical historical novel is to be reckoned with as among the most interesting and popular of all modern novels. While time has not yet made a catalogue of one of our public libraries was placed in my hand. As I turned the pages I read the following names of some of the great books of fiction: There were Joseph Ingraham's "The Prince of the House of David" and his "Pillar of Fire, or Israel In Bondage"; there were George Ebers' "Uarda" and Frederick Knapfer's "Titus, a Comrade of the Cross"; there was Marie Corelli's "Barabbas," besides a score of other names suggestive of Biblical lore, while Edward Everett Hale's "In His Name," and Charles Sheldon's "In His Steps," and Hall Caine's "Christian," and Lew Wallace's "Ben-Hur," and Neille Ker Stone's "When Jesus Was Here Among Men," all deal directly or indirectly with oriental teachings and characters of the life of Jesus translated into modern thought.

But, though many of the great characters of the Old and New Testaments have been made to come forth out of their graves and live and breathe in the times of yore, there is one Bible character who has never, so far as I know, been made the hero of a historical novelist's tale. Indeed, there is one Bible character that has never, so far as I know, been made the subject of a sermon. The ministers seem to ignore making a sketch of this man, just as do the historical novelists. I allude here to the character of Joseph. I do not mean Joseph who was the son of old Jacob or Joseph of Arimathea, but of Joseph of Nazareth, Joseph of Bethlehem, Joseph the carpenter, Joseph who was the husband of Mary, of whom Jesus was born.

Now, as the annual Christmas holidays are but a few days off I thought I would preach a sermon about Joseph the carpenter. I want to tell you why he was at the manger. In other sermons you have heard why Mary was there, and why the shepherds were there, and why the angels sang in the air, and the horses were there. To-day I want to tell you why Joseph was there, for all the characters of the Bible there is not one which appeals to me in a more vivid way than does this brawny, rugged, stout-limbed mechanic, who passed no object of interest among the Zebulon hills.

Joseph came to the manger, in the first place, to make sure that the Jesus to be born in Bethlehem of Judaea. He came to the manger in order that the words of the prophecy might be fulfilled. He came to the manger because toward Judaea all the sages of the Brahmin capital were looking for the expected Son of God to be born. He came to the manger, for if he had not come Mary the Virgin would never have gone there to give birth to her child, and the wise men of the east would never have been able to find there the infant Christ. This being born in Bethlehem was absolutely essential for the fulfilment of prophecy.

There were two ways by which the Savior of divinity was to be placed upon Christ's life. The first was by his miracles. What do I mean by that? In Simply this: When the people began to crowd around Jesus, and he said, "I am the Son of God, follow me," the people answered, "How do we know thou art the Christ?" He said, "I will show, you; come and see." Then he stopped down and made the crooked limbs straight. Then he expectorated upon the ground and made clay of it, and the spittle and dirt and rubbed it upon the blind eyes, and they were opened. Then he stepped to the door of the only son of his mother, and she a widow, and he said, "Young man, I say unto thee, arise!" Then he turned to the people and practically said: "Could any being, unless he was the Son of God, do these things?" In demand from you obedience to my will on account of the wonders that I perform." Then he looked to heaven and said, "By what right dost thou claim to be the promised Messiah?" he could answer: "Because I have in common the predictions of your own prophets, and at the very beginning was that utterance of Micah, the Morasthite, who wrote over seven centuries ago, 'But thou Bethlehem Ephratah, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall he come forth unto me that is to be a ruler in Israel, whose goings forth have been of old, from everlasting.' Did not the prophet foresee my birth? Was I not thus miraculously born, fulfilling the prediction?" Jesus would not have been able to give this convincing answer if Joseph had not been the man he was. How did it happen that Joseph and Mary were, at this critical time, in that particular place, so far from their home?

By a decree of Rome in reference to the levying of taxes Caesar Augustus wanted to know how much money he could collect from his provinces; therefore he ordered a census to be taken. All the people of Palestine had to answer to that enrollment. But, though Judaea was a conquered province, the Roman law allowed itself to be harmonized with the Hebrew law, and, while it allowed the Hebrew people to be enrolled by families, as they had always been accustomed to do, instead of by districts. Thus all the descendants of David assembled at the prophet's ancient birthplace village, where their great ancestor was born. And that was the reason Joseph, the native of Nazareth, was on the way from the north to be enrolled in Bethlehem at that particular time when Jesus was born. Why? Because he did not have taken this journey had Joseph belonged to any other family than that of David. Why? Because if the man law a woman, unless she was a property holder, did not have to answer to the call of the census, as she had no property holder. Mary in her critical state of health would naturally have stayed at home, but she had to go because he was a man. And because he had no one with whom to leave his wife he was obliged to take her along. Thus we find that this important fact, fulfilling the ancient prophecies, which would be vital to the Jew, was brought about by the tenderness of Joseph, the husband of Mary. On such small matters do great events hang. Is it not an impressive thought that God plans all the events of our lives, as we see in the arrangements of the circumstances that brought Joseph and Mary to Bethlehem at this time?

Joseph, being a descendant of David, was the cause of the Bethlehem birth of Jesus Christ. You in the same way may be an essential factor for the divine birth of some immortal soul. You may say you are a humble man, as was Joseph. You may say you occupy only a mechanic's position. You may say you wear a laborer's garments. But your words and your acts are going to decide the eternal destiny of some immortal soul. It was the false words of a cowardly peasant guide at Waterloo that sent Napoleon's great vitelle to St. Helena. When the battle raged the fiercest the little Corsican hurried to the rear and stepped to get on the saddle of his horse and said, "Is there any obstacle in the way for a charge?" Then yonder stood the Pyrenean lanxes, but instead of hurling the French cavalry against the English ranks he led them on a fatal gallop into the ravine of Ohain, where they tumbled in and were slaughtered by thousands. It was a false guide that destroyed the French army at Waterloo. Is it possible that you by light words or by your inconsistent life may become a false guide to some seeking soul? Be careful and strive rather to be, like Joseph, faithful to the call of duty. He it was who, obedient to the divine direction, traveled to Bethlehem and so made it possible for Jesus to be born in the city of his ancestors, according to the word of the prophet.

Do you not glory in the great deeds of Joseph, the humble carpenter, paved the way for Christ's advent, Joseph, the humble carpenter, was the means of Christ's sustenance during the years of his childhood helplessness? I am glad that God has work for his great men to do. I am glad that he has one place for a Moses, and another place for a Joshua, and another for an Elijah, and another for a Paul, and another for a John, and another for a Luther, and another for a Rowland Hill, and another for a Calvin, and another for a Wesley, and another for a Lincoln, and another for a John Bright and a Gladstone. I do not begrudge any of these men their prominent fields, but I am also glad that God has his humble places which are also essential places. I am glad he has his places for his Marys, and his Marthas, and his Elisabeths, and his poor widows of Zarephath, and his Enochs, and his Josephs of Nazareths and his Cushis, as well as for his Joabs, and Abishals, and Itzals, and Davids. Ah, yes, the work of Joseph the carpenter caring for the helpless Christ during his years of infancy should teach us all to honor God in our own work in life, no matter how insignificant it may be.

The ennobling example of a pure marital love was furnished by Joseph's journey to the Bethlehem manger. The gentle love which bound your father and mother together and molded you and your brothers and sisters in a moral and spiritual way was the same kind of gentle love that bound Joseph to Mary and helped to mold the mental life of the infant Christ, for, though Joseph the carpenter was not the father of Jesus, he gave him parental care and must have received from that loving nature a boy's gratitude. Still more as Jesus grew to years of discretion and learned the circumstances of his birth would his love for his mother include also the man who had protected her. Nothing more manly is found in all history than Joseph's attitude toward Mary when he found out she was to become the mother of the infant Christ.

Let me explain to you this history more in detail. Joseph was an intense man. He was one of those men whom women have hard work to influence. He was evidently an elderly man, probably fifty years of age, but he was one who when he did surrender his heart to a woman gave to her his whole heart and not a part. He loved Mary with that deep, tender, holy affection which only a true, strong man can give to a truly good, noble, beautiful woman. He loved her with a love that would willingly lay down his life if he could make the loved one happier or the sacrifice. He never so much as that her companionship became the hope, the joy and the heart of his very existence. He loved her for time and for eternity.

Now, when Mary was about to become the mother of Christ all the people of her village knew it. They gossiped about it. They at once looked upon her as a bad woman. In the sight of these Hebrew people she was a social outcast. Joseph was at first much incensed. The Bible tells us that he was about to break the bonds of the marital engagement and "put her away privily," but upon an angel of the Lord appeared unto him and said that Mary was to become the mother of the Son of God, "for that which is conceived of her is of the Holy Spirit," at once this brave, noble carpenter became her protector. He knew that he would be despised for marrying her, yet he hesitated not one instant. He stepped right up to her side. He put his arm about her. He said: "Mary my love, and slander shall not touch me, I shall give thee the protection of my name." Then he turned and faced the cynical, sneering, scoffing, gabbling villagers with flashing eye he said: "This is my wife. He who strikes at her strikes at me!" Did you ever read of a more noble and manly act than this of Joseph, who gave to this trembling girl the protection of his name at the most sacred moment of her life?

The Saviour's struggle for daily bread when he became a young man was also the result of Joseph's journey to the manger of Bethlehem of Judaea. When Joseph went to Bethlehem with Mary he seemed to say, "I will look after you, love and the young child." But there came a time when Joseph could no longer look after Mary and Jesus. Death came in and took Joseph away. Then Jesus had to step into Joseph's place and become the support of the rest of the family.

Christ by the forced toil and struggle must have been fitted for sympathy with the struggles of young men and young women. There must have been many a weary hour in that carpenter shop when Jesus, with aching back, struggled on to fight the wolf of cold and of hunger from the door. There must have been many a blister upon the hand from the almost ceaseless gripping of saw and plane and chisel. There must have been many a bleeding finger and blackened thumb when the tired arm was no longer able to direct the hammer aright and instead of striking the iron nail it crashed into the bruised flesh. Christ as the man understands with the hungry, because Christ as the boy perhaps often went hungry himself that the brothers and sisters might have enough to eat. The ties which bound Mary the mother to her eldest son were very sacred, but no side they must have struggled to rear those children. Side by side they must have endured the years. Side by side they must have struggled to bear those children. Side by side they must have endured the years. Side by side they must have struggled to rear those children. Side by side they must have endured the years. Side by side they must have struggled to bear those children. Side by side they must have endured the years. Side by side they must have struggled to rear those children. Side by side they must have endured the years.

WISE AND OTHERWISE.

"The local physician had been called in to see the village editor.

"Your circulation is poor," said the M. D., after an examination.

"You're away off there, doc," rejoined the scissors wielder. "We secured five new subscriptions this week and only lost two old ones."

Mild in Their Action.—Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are very mild in their actions. They do not cause gripping in the stomach or cause disturbances there in so many pills do. Therefore the most delicate can take them without fear of unpleasant results. They can, too, be administered to children without imposing the penalties which follow the use of pills not so carefully prepared.

Pat—I'm after bidding you good-bye, Moike. It's to Ireland for me, looks like a gold mine beside the $1.20 in Amerikky.

Mike—But, Pat, do you mind that Dalhousie is one of the hottest places in the world? It's 120 in the shade most every day.

Pat—You don't suppose that I am such a blamed fool as to stay in the shade all the time, do you?

They are a Powerful Nervine.—Dyspepsia cause derangement of the nervous system, and nervous debility is one ingredient it is difficult to deal with. There are many testimonials as to the efficacy of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills in treating this disorder, showing that they never fail to produce good results. By giving proper tone to the digestive organs, they restore equilibrium to the nerve centres.

"Say, said Little Willie, "what is the difference between a magnet and a magnate?"

A magnet, Willie, is a metallic substance, generally of iron, which has the attractive power to attract certain metals, but not gold or silver. A magnate is a metallic substance, principally of brass, which will attract gold and silver only."

There is nothing equal to Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator for destroying worms. This article of its kind has given such satisfaction.

"Have you any children, Jones?" "Yes, sir. You know Robinson?" "Which? Robinson senior?" "Yes." "Know him very well. What's that got to do with it?" "Nothing, only I'll tell you. He and I have fifty-one between us." "What are you talking about? You must be crazy! What do you mean?" "It's quite simple. He lives on one side of the orphan asylum and I on the other!"

Holloway's Corn Cure is the medicine to use in all kinds of corns, hard, soft, and only costs a trifle. Small sum of twenty-five cents.

Young Lady—Did you make an excuse for me to the gentleman who called?

Younger—Yes, mum. I told him you had gone to bed with the toothache.

Young Lady—Gracious! He's my dentist, and knows my teeth are false.

To decern and plod immediately with causes and [illegible] a norm, tauser than to battle with effects after the disease has secured a foothold, is the chief aim of the medical mind, and Hickle-Anti-Consumptive Syrup is the result of patient study along this particular line. At the first appearance of a cold the Syrup will be found a most efficacious remedy, arresting disease and healing the affected parts, so that the alarming dangers may be averted.

Interrogation—What seems to be the trouble with your meter, madam.

Housekeeper—I don't know, but I am afraid its something of a gasbreh tater.

A detective to Mr. Tar—Under the sad sea is fisherman, the miner, the farmer, the mechanic, and all who live lives of toil and spend our existence in the shelter of humble homes, of who are exposed to injure and ailments, of those who bid defiance to Pain Killer. Perry Davis' Painkiller.

Electric Oil an excellent friend and medicator in every time of need.

Bagman—Is there anything you don't need that I might take?

Housekeeper—Yes; a hack.

The pretty girl with the auburn hair had refused him.

"I never dreamed, Mr. Smythe," she said, "that your attentions to me were anything more than those of a friend."

"Oh, you didn't?" growled the young man. "You thought I had been running here regularly once a week during the last six months merely for the pleasure of seeing you eat a 50-cent box of candy, did you?"

"I know lots of women who haven't any sense of humor."

"Such—Well, what of it? I know lots of men who haven't any sense at all."

Too Scotchman had been out late and were getting home. One of them stumbled, fell into a ditch and could not get up.

"Sandy," said he, "wilt ye help me out?"

"Dandy," said Andy, "I canna help ye out, but I'll be doon wi' ye."

Husband—Do you mean to say that your judgment is superior to mine?

Wife—Certainly not, my dear. A comparison of life partners proves that in infinitesimity of judgement we are equal.

Lady—Are you not ashamed to ask for alms?

Nurse—No, indeed, madam; if those children can't go for alms when I drop 'em.

George Howard has returned from Perry, where he has been visiting.

His reports a very rough fall on the lakes.

William Macdonald and Henry Filson have gone to New Ontario to see their farms there.

At the last regular meeting of Derry Lodge, No. 2, Prentice Boys, the following officers were elected for 1906: P.W.M., Hartley Fleming; W. M. R. J. Marshall; D.M., Joseph Bray recording secretary, John Filson; financial secretary, C. A. Gibson; treasurer, Samuel Giles; D. of C., W. Glen; chaplain, W. H. Preston; committee men, H. P. Saunders, H. WISE AND OTHERWISE.

The local physician had been called in to see the village editor.

"Your situation is grave," said the M. D., after an examination.

"You're away off there, doc," rejoined the scissors wielder. "We secured five new subscriptions this week and only lost two old ones."

Mild in Their Action.—Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are very mild in their action. They do not cause griping in the stomach or cause disturbances there as so many pills do. Therefore the most delicate can take them without fear of unpleasant results. They can, too, be administered to children without imposing the penalties which follow the use of pills not so carefully prepared.

Jat—I'm after bidding you good-bye, Moike. It's to Panama for me. Shure, $4 a day workin' on the canal looks like a good mine beside the $1.20 in Amerikky.

Mike—But, Pat, do you mind that Panama is one of the hottest places in the world? It's 120 in the shade most every day.

Pat—You don't suppose that I am such a blamed fool as to stay in the shade all the time, do you?

They are a Powerful Nervine.—Dyspepsia cause derangement of the nervous system, and nervous debility once engendered is difficult to deal with. There are many testimonials as to the efficacy of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills in treating this disorder, showing that they never fail to produce good results. By giving proper tone to the digestive organs, they restore equilibrium to the nerve centres.

"Dad," said little Willie, "what is the difference between a magnet and a magnate?"

"A magnet, Willie, is a metallic substance, generally of iron, which will attract certain metals, but not gold or silver. A magnate is a metallic substance (usually of brass), which will attract gold and silver only."

There is nothing equal to Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator for destroying worms. No article of its kind has given such satisfaction.

"Have you any children, Jonks?" "Oh, yes! You know Robinson?" "What! Robinson—William—children? I know him very well. What's that got to do with it? I'm going to tell you. He and I have a bet depending upon it. "What are you talking about? You bet on your children? What do you mean?" "It's quite correct; I'm to live on one side of the orphan asylum and I on the other."

Holloway's Corn Cure is the medicine to use on all kinds of corns and warts, and only costs a trifle and a tenth part of a dollar.

Young Lady—Did you make an excuse for me to the gentleman who was here?

Bridget—Yes, mum. I told him you had gone to bed with the toothache.

Young Lady—Gracious! He's my fiancé, and he knows I have all my teeth.

Adopt Dr. Ami Cotes impulsive Syrup in the fault of patient study about the particular. Employer—Jones, I've had a lot of trouble with your meter, madam. Servant—Nothing serious, I hope? Mr. I'm afraid its something of a gastric nature.

A dedication to All. To soldier the soldier, to sailor the sailor, to fireman the fireman, to nurse and all who live lives of use and spirit our exercise in the dedication of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil as an excellent friend and benefactor in every time of need.

Bagman—Is there anything you don't need that I might take? House Cleaner—Yes, a bath.

The pretty girl with the auburn hair had refused him.

"I never dreamed, Mr. Smythkins," she said, "that your attentions to me were anything more than those of a friend."

"Oh, you didn't understand the young man. "You thought I had been running with you regularly ever since the spring, that calk monthly meeting for the practice of getting some oil at Sweet tea of candy, did you?"

He—I know lots of women who haven't any sense of humor.

She—Well, what of it? I know lots of men who haven't any sense at all.

"Sandy," said Andy, "I canna help ye out, but I'll tell ye what I'll do."

Husband—Do you mean to say that your judgment is superior to mine?

"But, Peggy," he said quietly, looking deep into her eyes, "it would have won me your respect."

CHAPTER XXI.

MONTY'S situation was desperate. Only a little more than $6,000 had been spent on the Carlo site, and the prospect of annihilating the roulette winnings seemed to offer itself. His experience at Monte Carlo did not encourage him to try again, and Peggy's attitude toward the place was distinctly antagonistic. The Riviera presenting no new opportunities for extravagance, it became necessary to seek other worlds.

"I never before understood the real meaning of the phrase 'tight money,'" thought Monty. "Lord, if it would only loosen a bit and stay loosened!" Something must be done, he realized, to earn his living. Perhaps the role of the fortunate bridegroom would be easier in Italy than anywhere else. He studied the outlook from every point of view, but there were moments when it seemed precarious. Baedeker was provokingly barren of suggestions for extravagance, and Monty grew impatient of the book's small economies. Noticing some stars on the Italian lakes, in an inspired moment he remembered that Pettingill had once lost his heart to a villa on the lake of Como. Instantly a new act of the comedy presented itself to him. He sought out Pettingill and demanded a description of his castle in the air.

"Oh, it's a wonder," exclaimed the artist. And his eyes grew dreamy. "It shines out at you with its white terraces and turrets like those fascinating castles that Maxfield Parrish draws for children. It is fairyland. You expect to wake and find it gone."

"Oh, drop that, Petty," said Brewster, "or it will make you poetical. What I want to know is where you are and is it likely to be occupied at this season?"

"It belongs to a certain marquise, who is a widow with no children. They say she has a horror of the place for some reason and has never been near it. It is kept as though she meant to turn up the next day, but except for the servants it is always deserted."

"The very thing," declared Brewster. "Petty, we'll have a house party."

"You'd better not count on that, Monty. A man I know ran across the place once and tried for a year to buy it. But the lady has taken a fancy to it. "Well, if you wish to give him a hint or two about how to do things, watch me. If you don't spend two weeks in your dream castle I will cut the crowd and sail for home."

He secured the name of the owner and found that Pettingill had even a remote idea of the address of her agent. Armed with these facts, he set out in search of a courier, and through Philippe he secured a Frenchman named Bertier, who was guaranteed to be surprisingly ingenious in providing methods of spending money. To him Brewster confided his scheme, and Bertier realized with rising enthusiasm that at last he had secured a client after his own heart. He was able to comprehend the address of the agent of the mysterious marquise, and an inquiry was immediately telegraphed to him.

The answer was one to which Bertier was discouraging to any one but Brewster. It stated that the owner had no intention of leasing her forsaken castle for any period, but that the agent had learned that a fair price for an estate of that kind for a month was 10,000 francs. He was willing to rent out five times that sum for two weeks. The agent replied that some delay would be necessary while he communicated with the marquise, but that the sum named that Brewster did not understand, so he wired him an address in Genoa, and the Flitter was made ready for sea. Steam being up, the crew and the coal account would compare favorably with that of an ocean liner. Philippe was trembling with joy at the thought of being in advance for another month at the hotel on the assumption that the party might be moved to return at any moment. He little knew what was at parting, and Brewster and his guests were given a royal farewell.

At Genoa the mail had accumulated and both the generation of the yacht to the exclusion of everything else. Brewster was somewhat crestfallen to learn that the lady of the villa haughtily refused his princely offer. He won the lifelong devotion of his courier by promptly increasing it to 100,000 francs. When this, too, met with rejection there was a pause as well as a serious consultation between the two.

"Bertier," exclaimed Brewster, "I must have the thing now. What's to be done? You've got to help me out."

But the courier, prodigal as he was of gestures, had no words with which to express his gratitude.

"There must be some way of getting at this marquise," Monty continued reflectively. "What are her vanities? Do you know anything about her?"

Suddenly the face of the courier grew bright. "I have it," he said, and then he faltered. "But the expense, monsieur—it would be heavy."

"Perhaps we can meet it," suggested Monty quietly. "What's the idea?"

It was explained, with plenty of action to make it clear. The courier had heard in Florence that madame la marquise had a passion for automobiles. But with her inadequate fortune and the many demands upon it it was a weakness not readily gratified. Her chauffeur had used during the winter was by no means up to date. Possibly if monsieur— Yet it was too much. No child—

But Brewster's decision was made. "Wire the fellow," he said, "that I will add to my last offer a French machine of the latest model and the highest make. Say, too, that I would like immediate possession."

He secured it, and the crowd was transferred at once to fairyland. There were protests, of course, but these Brewster had grown to expect, and he was not disposed to consider them in a high hand. The travelers had been preceded by Bertier, and the greeting they received from the agent and the estate and his innumerable assistants was very Italian and full of color. A break in their monotony was welcome.

The loveliness of the villa and its grounds, which sloped down to the gentle lake, silenced criticism. For a time all were overawed by the beauty of the scene.

ALBERT.

It is our sad duty this week to chronicle the death of Mr. Ralph Anderson, who passed away on Tuesday, Dec. 12th, after an illness of three years, aged 58 years. Deceased was born in Tyendinaga, and lived in the last concession until about thirty years ago, when he married Miss Jane Bolton, and has since resided at Albert. Deceased leaves a widow and one son, William, to mourn the loss of a kind and loving husband and father. The deceased in religion was a Presbyterian, and was highly respected, he being always a true friend and neighbor. The funeral took place on Friday, and was largely attended, the remains being placed in Melrose vault to await the interment. The funeral service was conducted by the Rev. Mr. McArthur, of Melrose. The family have our sympathy of the entire community in their sad bereavement.

Mr. Patrick Hart, of Stoco, spent Sunday at Mr. M. Harris.

Mrs. Frank Corrigan, of Hressington, spent a few days of the past week at Mrs. M. Corrigan's.

Miss H. Riordan, of Forest Mills, spent a few days of the past week, the guest of Miss Annie Williams.

Miss Lucy Corrigan spent the past week at Hressington, the guest of her brother, Mr. F. Corrigan.

A WINNIPEG RECEPTION.

The home of Dr. A. D. Carscallen, 580 Balmoral st., Winnipeg, was the scene of a pretty reception, held on the afternoon and evening of Dec. 5th and given in honor of Rev. and Mrs. C. R. Carscallen, of Dresden, Ont., who were on their way to Chentu, West China, where they have been appointed by the Canadian Board of Methodist missions. The drawing rooms were profusely decorated with beautiful pale pink chrysanthemums and ferns, where the ladies received their numerous callers. Mrs. A. D. Carscallen was gowned in a pale green and blue Dresden silk trimmed with embroidery and chiffon, and black velvet sash and loops, and Mrs. C. R. Carscallen, who received with her, looked very charming in her lovely white silk wedding gown, trimmed with embroidered chiffon and chiffon ruffles arrangement pleated.

Tea was served in the dining room on tables gleaming with silver and cut glass, and decorated with lovely large white chrysanthemums, with exquisite effect, in charge of Mrs. Spera, Mrs. Bright, Miss Scott, Miss Mabel Scott and Misses Minnie White.

Many friends of the Doctor and Mrs. Carscallen greeted the young couple and wished them God-speed on their long journey westward, when they will take three months' constant travelling before reaching their destination, and where they expect to remain for seven years before returning to visit their friends in the home land.

NOMINATIONS.

A large crowd assembled at the Town Hall last Friday night to take part in the nominations and hear what was to be said. The old Council was declared elected by acclamation, by Tow Clerk, W. A. Grange.

Messrs. W. T. Gibson, East Ward, and E. W. Scott, West Ward, were declared re-elected as school trustees, and Mr. Dudley L. Hinch was elected for Centre Ward, instead of Mr. A. W. Grange, resigned, who has held a place on the board for the past six teen years.

Messrs. J. L. Madill, J. H. Dafoe and W. C. Mikel were nominated as electric light commissioners, but all declined to act. In all probability the Town Council will manage the new plant for the ensuing year.

AFTER MEETING

At the close of the regular proceedings Mr. John T. Gibson was called to the chair, and short addresses were made by the following gentlemen:

The Mayor-elect, Mr. Jos. Lowry, explained that another dollar meeting relations with the Napanee Electric Light Company. He worked hard and Mr. Ali. Knight. That the company's record for securing light and power had been against mortgage debentures and put their plant in operation. The only security the Council would have for this loan would be a mortgage on the plant. The town official would not accept this proposition, but would have to pay the loan in twenty-five or ten years, at $2,000 per annum, for after paying this the Company would own it. The town has looked about for some time in order to find the cheapest power, and finally succeeded to ask the Provincial Legislature for a special act, which was given from the Commercial sections of the Municipal Act. This fact course was finally adopted, and after a fruitless appeal to the Supreme Court to the Light Company, the special Legislation was obtained. The next step was to have the by-law to authorize the town to erect a power plant. This by-law was submitted to the electors in July last and carried by an overwhelming majority. Since that time the Council has worked arduously, and now the standing has not been without opposition. The Cartwright interests have made determined efforts to prevent the work of installing the plant. They have, however, failed in their efforts, and now the completion of the work is in the cold weather. Mr. Knight Richard Cartwright and Mr. Knight have both been heroes in the Council, and although they have appealed from the decision of the Court of Appeal, they will be beaten again in the Courts. They are paying for time and helping to spend the ratepayers money in defending the suit, but they will pay their share in the end. The Mayor thanked the electors for their kindness in electing him to the Mayor's chair for a second term by acclamation. Spoke of his work in the Council for twenty years, and this was the first time he had not had to face a contest.

Councillor Simpson, after thanking the electors for the honor they had done him in electing him by acclamation, explained some items in the Finance Committee's report. He was chairman of the Finance committee for the year, and was pleased to see that while the financial interests of the town were not neglected, the ward work was better condition financially than a year ago. Last year they had a balance in the bank of some $78,000, and this year they faced a deficit of $14,000 which they had borrowed from the bank. But to offset this they had expenditure of about $4400. on Electric Light account. This would really that part account. This would really that part account. This would really that part

RAISE WHAT'S WANTED.

Few really intelligent and progressive farmers are here complaining. The wise man is he who keeps himself ever on the alert to produce that commodity for which there is a good, strong, quick market.

There are several ways in which the cash returns from the farm may be largely increased and the labor become more to the point, money or work. For instance, the making of butter has come to be a great profit-making business in some farms.

Now, a few years ago, this end of the farming business was hardly worth bothering with. The farmer's wife set a few hens, raised a few chicks and sold a few eggs, but the whole thing didn't amount to much and never was counted on to help pay the interest or swell the bank account.

With a good Incubator and Brooder any farmer's wife can raise chicks so as to make a handsome annual cash revenue. You should get one at once and go into the raising of chicks. All you need is a small yard, eggs and the machine.

By the way, there's a fiver in Chatham, Ont., who are advertising an Incubator and Brooder that they offer to send it prepaid and wait for the money till after 1906 harvest. This offer is worth inquiring about. If you will write a post card with your name and address to The Manson Campbell Co., Dept. 81, Chatham, they will doubtless send full particulars of their offer.

You want to buy Hirties' Acme Stock Food and Condition Powders for your cattle and horses. This is the best on the market.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness, caused by catarrh, that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

Consumption

¶ There is no specific for consumption. Fresh air, exercise, nourishing food and Scott's Emulsion will come pretty near curing it, if there is anything to build on. Millions of people throughout the world are living and in good health on one lung.

¶ From time immemorial the doctors prescribed cod liver oil for consumption. Of course the patient could not take it in its old form, hence it did very little good. They can take and tolerate it for a long time. There is no oil, not excepting butter, so easily digested and absorbed by the system as cod liver oil in the form of Scott's Emulsion, and that is the reason it is so helpful in consumption where its use must be continuous.

¶ We will send you a sample free.

¶ Be sure that this picture in the form of a label is on the wrapper of every bottle of Emulsion you buy.

RESOLUTION OF CONDOLENCE

Hay Bay, 29th Dec., 1905.

To Mrs. Samuel Hambly,—

Dear Sister,—Our hearts sympathies are extended to you, Sister in Christ, and your family, in this hour and bereavement of the loss of a loving husband and kind affectionate father. Our dear brother was summoned from his manifold labors to give an account of his stewardship, and now that he has been taken away from the cares of life, we feel a blessed assurance that for him to die is gain.

His kindness of disposition and his unassuming manner won for him the confidence of those who had the pleasure of his acquaintance. You, sister, know his worth. You, too, deeply feel the loss. We pray that the good Lord will give you grace sufficient to bear up under His chastening, and may humbly, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord." Thank God he gave himself in the heavenly land we read the words of service, given while he was in life, "I speak with God now and will be death speak trumpet tones well." Yes we speak in such an hour as yours, dear friend, for in the Son of Man committed to us the sacred trust of the responsibility of direction of the fatherless ones committed to our care. Let them never so forget the example of their father in the Christian life, and memory, and imprint upon their youthful minds the path which hath led him to glory. Let how lives where the mysteries are revealed, and we can realize that it is so strange and non radictory to us as it is, that we are called to mourn the departure of our Heavenly Father made plain to us. We await, and may we so live one day, when we red with o s tears and pain shall be wiped away from there, and again he cheered and comforted by the touch of his loving hand

He who serves his own generation by the will of God, will be of service to generations to come.

Signed on behalf of Sand Hill Presbyterian church,

J. A. SHAVER,
JOSEPH HAMBLY,
GEORGE SMITH,

The Latest and Best Medicine for Women

Medicine has made great strides during the past few years. Doctors do not prescribe the same remedies now they did twenty-five years ago. There is something better. Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women are vastly better than the remedies put on the market three years with contain none of the medical discoveries since that time.

Good, perhaps, in their day, they are now superceded in the march of medical science by something better.

Many of the most effective ingredients in Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets had not been discovered twenty-five years ago. Some of them were not discovered ten years ago.

Yet the world's best physicians are now using them in diseases of women. There is no other preparation in which they can be obtained except these tablets. That is why we term Dr. Hugo's remedy "The twentieth century preparation for women." It is up-to-date. Women cannot afford to ignore these recently discovered ingredients, which science has made possible for their relief.

It is an incontrovertible fact that these tablets, embracing as they do all the latest and best in medicine, will change weak and diseased organs into those which they may be into strong and healthy organs, when the tired feeling, nervousness and irritability which come from a run-down condition, will disappear.

They will take away the backache, constipation, and dragging-down pains which are symptoms of a deranged condition or some serious disorder. They will cure all menstrual and uterine troubles even when chronic. In a word, they make healthy women.

Don't think you can never be a strong, healthy woman until after you have tried these tablets. One box will prove that you can. Improvement is noticed the first week.

RAISE WHAT'S WANTED.

Few really intelligent and progressive farmers are heard complaining. The wise man is he who manages to himself ever on the alert to produce that commodity for which there is a good, strong, quick market.

There are several ways in which the cash returns from the farm may be largely increased without the sacrifice of much time, money or work. For instance, the raising of poultry has come to be a great profit-making business on some farms.

Now, a few years ago, this end of the farming business was scarcely worth bothering with. The farmer's wife set a few hens, raised a few chicken and sold a few eggs, but the whole thing didn't amount to much and never was counted as being to pay" the interest or swell the bank account.

With a good Incubator and Brooder any farmer's wife can raise chicks so as to make a handsome annual cash revenue. You should get one at once and go into the raising of chicks. All you need is a small yard, eggs and the machine.

By the way, there's a firm at Chatham, Ont., who are advertising an Incubator and Brooder and who offer to send it to their customers on trial, to try till after 1906 harvest. This offer is worth inquiring about. You will write a post card with your name and address to The Manson Campbell Co., Dept. 81, Chatham, they will doubtless send full particulars of their offer.

You want to buy Hirties' Acme Stock Food and Condition Powders for your cattle and horses. This is the best on the market.

Consumption

¶ There is no specific for consumption. Fresh air, exercise, nourishing food and Scott's Emulsion will come pretty near curing it, if there is anything to build on. Millions of people throughout the world are living and in good health on one lung.

¶ From time immemorial the doctors prescribed cod liver oil for consumption. Of course the patient could not take it in its old form, hence it did very little good. They can take and tolerate it for a long time. There is no oil, not excepting butter, so easily digested and absorbed by the system as cod liver oil in the form of Scott's Emulsion, and that is the reason it is so helpful in consumption where its use must be continuous.

¶ We will send you a sample free.

¶ Be sure that this picture in the form of a label is on the wrapper of every bottle of Emulsion you buy.

Deafness Cannot be Cured.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness caused by catarrh, that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

RESOLUTION OF CONDOLENCE

Bay Bay, 29th Dec., 1905.

To Mrs. Tamsen Hambly,—

Dear Sister,—Our heartfelt sympathies are extended to you, Sister Hambly, and your family, in the sudden bereavement of the loss of your loving husband and kind affectionate father. Our dear friend has been taken in the flower of his manhood to give an account of his stewardship, and knowing that he has been taken up in the morning of life, we feel a bereavement that he has left us to do the work he has gain.

His kindliness of disposition and his unassuming manner won for him the confidence of those who had the pleasure of his acquaintance. You, dear sister, will miss him more than deeply feel his loss. We pray that the good Lord will give you grace, strength to bear up under this heavy blow, and to say humbly, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord." Trusting you will resign himself to the Heavenly Father. Let his words of comfort, upon which we rest in safety, speak with ten-fold power, and let his voice speak trumpet tones. He is always ready, for in such an hour as you think not, the Son of Man cometh." Dear sister, will devote his responsibility of direction of your children, and commend you to your grange. Teach them never to forget their kind father, and cherish and revere his memory, and strengthened as you will be in mind, you will find them to heaven. He has gone where there is no grief, no sorrow, where the things that once perplexed us here are in the high of the great ones. Heaven is a home for the weary. There is awaits us, and may we so live that we may be ready to go to our Father, and be with Him in the enjoyment of life, to meet our loved ones there, and again be cheered and strengthened as we see the good seed been here by the hand of loving Master.

He who serves his own generation by the will of God, falls asleep to the generation following."

Signed on behalf of Sand Hill Presbyterian church,

J. A. SHAVER,
Minister.

The Latest and Best Medicine for Women

Medicine has made great strides during the past few years. Doctors do not prescribe the same remedies now they did twenty-five years ago. There is something better. Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women are vastly better than the nostrums put on the market then, which contain none of the medical discoveries since that time.

Good, perhaps, in their day, they are now superceded in the march of medical science by something better.

Many of the most effective ingredients in Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets had not been discovered twenty-five years ago. Some of them were not discovered ten years ago.

Yet the world's best physicians are now using them in diseases of women. There is no other preparation in which they can be obtained except these tablets. That is why we term Dr. Hugo's remedy "The twentieth century medication for women." It is up-to-date. Women cannot afford to ignore these recently discovered ingredients, which science has made possible for their relief.

It is an incontrovertible fact that these tablets, embracing as they do, the latest and best in medicine, will change weak and diseased organs into matter of which they may be built into strong and healthy organs, when the tired feeling, nervousness, and irritability, which come from a run-down condition, will disappear.

They will take away the backache, constipation, and dragging-down pains which are symptoms of a run-down condition or some serious disorder. They will cure all menstruation or uterine troubles even when chronic. In a word, they make healthy women.

Don't think you can never be a strong, healthy woman until after you have tried these tablets. One box will prove to you the improvement is noticed the first week.

BREWSTER'S MILLIONS

I feel like the boy who was shut in a closet for punishment and found it the place where they kept the jam," said Subway. "It is almost as good as running Central park."

The stables were well equipped, and the girls were on in a wonderful number. It was on a radiant afternoon, when twelve of the crowd had started out after tea for a long ride toward Lenane, that Monty determined to call Peggy Gray to account. He was certain that she had deliberately avoided him for days and weeks, and he could find no reason for it. Hour after hour he had lain awake wondering where he had failed her, but the conclusion at which he always arrived the next time Monte Carlo episode seemed the most plausible cause, yet even before he had noticed that whenever he approached her she had contrived to be talking with some one else. Two or three times he was sure she had seen him coming before she took refuge with Mrs. Dan or Mary Valentine or Pettigill. The thought of the last gave Monty a sudden thrill. If it were he who had come between them? It troubled him, but there were moments when the idea was impossible. As they mounted the slope of the exhilarating road he made him hopeful. They were to dinner in the open air in the ruins of an abbey ruin some miles off, and the servants had been sent on to prepare it. It went well, and Mrs. Dale's help the dinner was a success. On the return Monty, who at last, spurred up his horse to Peggy. She seemed eager to be left to herself, and he lost no time with trifling.

"You know, Peggy," he began, "that seems to be wrong, and I am considering what it is."

"What do you mean, Monty?" she mused.

"Every time I come near you, child, you seem to have something else to do, or the group you are in it is the last you to break away."

"Silence, Monty! Why should I not?

"We have known one another much too long for that." But he had detected some contradiction in her tones, and he was right. The girl's mirth, afraid of the sensation awoke, afraid desperately of it.

Pettigill may appeal to you," he said his voice was serious, "but I am glad he must be courteous to me. I am absurd you are, Monty Brewster."

The girl grew hot. "You needn't think that your million gives you the privilege of dictation to all of your friends."

Peggy! How can you?" he interjected.

She went on ruthlessly. "If my conduct interferes with your highness' pleasure I can easily join the Prestons in Paris."

Suddenly Brewster remembered that Pettingill had spoken of the Prestons and expressed a fleeting wish that he might be with them in the Latin quarter. "With Pettigill to Bohemia, I suppose," he said lelly. "It would certainly give you more privacy."

"And Mrs. Dan more opportunities," she retorted as he dropped back toward the others.

The artist instantly took his place. The next moment he had challenged her to a race and they were flying down the road in the moonlight. Brewster, not to be outdone, was after them, but it was only a moment before his horse shied violently at something black in the road. Then he saw Peggy's horse galloping riderless. Instantly, with fear at his throat, he had dismounted and was at the girl's side. She was not hurt, they found; only bruised and dazed and somewhat lamed. A girth had broken and her saddle turned. The crowd waited, silent and with what awed, until the carriage with the servants came up and she was put in it. Mrs. Dan's maid was there, and Peggy insisted that she would have no one else. But as Monty helped her in he had whispered: "You won't go home, will you? How could things go on here?"

CHAPTER XXII.

THE peacefulness of fairyland was disturbed that afternoon by something which Brewster could not afford to continue, and with Bertier he was soon plunging to invade it. The automobile which he obliged in order for the mysterious marquise put other ideas into his head. It seemed at once absolutely necessary to give a coaching party in Italy, and, as couches of the right kind were hard to find there and changes of horses most uncertain, nothing could be more simple and natural than to import automobiles from Paris. Looking into the matter, he found that they would have to be purchased outright, as the renting of five machines would put his credit to too severe a "et. Accordingly Brewster telegraphed a wholesale order, which taxed the resources of the manufacturers and caused much complaint from some customers whose work was momentarily delayed. The arrangement made by the courier was that they were to be taken back at a greatly reduced price at the end of six weeks. The machines were shipped at once, sent to Milan and one to the address of the mysterious marquise in Florence.

It was with sharp regret that Monty broke into the idyl of the villa, for the witchery of the place had got into his blood. But a stern sense of duty, combined with the fact that the Paris chauffeurs and machines were due in Milan on Monday, made him ruthless. He was astonished that his orders to decamp were so meekly obeyed, forgetting that his solicitous guests did not know that worse extravagance lay beyond. He took them to Milan by train and lodged them with some splendor at the Hotel Cavour. Here he found that the fame of his princely prodigate had preceded him, and his portly host was all deference and attention—all regret, too, for monsieur was just too late to hear the wonderful company of artists who had been singing at La Scala. The season was but just ended. Here was an opportunity missed, indeed, and Brewster's vexation brought out an ironical comment to Bertier. It rankled, but it had its effect. The courier proved equal to the emergency. Discovering that the manager of the company and the principal artists were still in Milan, he suggested to Brewster that a special performance would be very difficult to secure, but might still be possible. His chief caught at the idea and authorized him to make every arrangement, regarding the entire house for his own party.

"But the place will look bare," protested the courier, aghast.

"Fill it with flowers; cover it with tapestries," commanded Brewster. "I put the affair in your hands, and I trust you to carry it through in the right way. Show them how it ought to be done."

Brewster's heart swelled within him at the thought of so glorious an opportunity. His fame, he felt, was already established in Italy. It became a matter of pride to do the thing handsomely, and the necessary business arrangements called out all his unused resources of delicacy and diplomacy. When it came to the decoration of the opera house he called upon Pettigill for assistance, and together they superintended an arrangement which contained of a large part of the place and reduced it to livable proportions. With the flowers and the lights, the tapestries and the great faded flags, it became something quite different from the usual empty theater.

To the consternation of the Italians, the work had been rushed, and it was on the evening after their arrival in Milan that Brewster conducted his friends in state to the Scala. It was almost a triumphal progress, for he had generously if unwittingly given the town the most princely sensation in years, and curiosity was abundant. Mrs. Valentine, who was in the carriage with Monty, wondered openly why they were attracting so much attention.

"They take us for American dukes and princesses," explained Monty. "They never saw a white man before."

"Perhaps they expected us to ride on buffaloes," said Mrs. Dan, "with Indian squaws in our train."

"No," Subway Smith protested; "I seem to see disappointment in their faces. They are looking for crowns and sceptors and a shower of gold coin. Really, Monty, you don't play the game as you should. Why, I could give you points on the potentate act myself—a milk white steed, a few clattering attendants in gorgeous uniforms, a lofty nod here and there and little me distributing silver in the rear."

"I wonder," exclaimed Mrs. Dan, "if they don't get tired now and then of being potentates. Can't you fancy living in palaces and longing for a thatched cottage?"

"Easily," answered Subway, with a laugh. "Haven't we tried it ourselves? Two months of living upon nothing but fatted calves is more than I can stand. We shall be ready for a home for dyspeptics if you can't slow down a bit, Monty."

Whereupon Mrs. Dan evolved a plan and promptly began to carry it out by inviting the crowd to dinner the next night. Monty protested that they would be leaving Milan on the afternoon and that this was distinctly his affair, and he was selfish.

But Mrs. Dan was very sure. "My dear boy, you can't have things your own way every minute. In another month you will be quite spoiled. Anything to prevent that. My duty is plain. Even if I have to use heroic measures, you dine with me tomorrow."

Monty recognized defeat when he met it and graciously accepted her very kind invitation. The next moment they were at the opera house and were ushered in with a deference only accorded to wealth. The splendor of the effect was overpowering to Brewster as well as to his bewildered guests. Aladdin, it seemed, had fairly outdone himself. The wonder of it was so complete that it was some time before they could settle down to the opera, which was "Aida," given with an enthusiasm that only Italians can compass.

During the last intermission Brewster and Peggy were walking in the foyer. They had rarely spoken since the day of the ride, but with Monty noticed with happiness that she had on several occasions avoided Pettigill.

"I thought we had given up fairyland when we left the lakes, but I believe you carry it with you," she said.

"The trouble with this," Monty replied, "is that there are too many people about. My fairyland is to be just a little different."

"Your fairyland, Monty, will be built of gold and rubies and will cost you will sit all day cutting coupons in an office of alabaster."

"I thought you had given up fairyland when we left the lakes, but I believe you carry it with you," she said. "You are much too generous to be vulgar. But it worries me, Monty, it worries me desperately. It's the future I'm thinking of—your future, which is being swallowed up. This kind of thing can't go on. And what is to follow it? You are wasting your substance, and you are not making any life for yourself that opens out."

"Peggy," he answered very seriously, "you have got to trust me. I can't back out, but I'll tell you this—you shall not be disappointed in me in the end."

There was a mist before the girl's eyes as she looked at him. "I believe you, Monty," she said simply. "I shall not forget."

The curtain rose upon the next act, and something in the opera toward the end seemed to bring the two very close together. As they were leaving the theater there was a note of regret from Peggy. "It has been perfect," she breathed, "yet, Monty, isn't it a waste that no one else should have seen it? Think of these poverty stricken peasants who adore music and have never heard an opera."

"Well, they shall hear one now," Monty rose to it, but he felt like a hypocrite in concealing his chief motive. "We'll repeat the performance tomorrow night and all the house with them."

He was as good as his word. Bertier was given a task the next day which was not to his taste. But with the assistance of the city authorities he carried it through. To them it was an emergency of insanity, but there was something princely about it and they were tolerant. The manager of the opera house was less complacent, and he had an exclamatory terror of the damage to his upholstery. But Brewster had discovered that in Italy gold is a panacea for all ills, and his prescription were liberal. To him the day was short, for Peggy's interest in the penance, as it came to be called, was so keen that she insisted on having a hand in the preliminaries. There was something about the partnership that appealed to Monty.

To her regret the DeMille dinner interfered with the opening of the performance, but Monty consoled her with the promise that the opera and its democratic audience should follow. During the day Mrs. Dan had been deep in preparations for her banquet, but her plans were elaborately concealed. They culminated at 8 o'clock in the Cova, not far from the Scala, and the dinner was eaten in the garden to the sound of music. Yet it was an effect of simplicity with which Mrs. Dan surprised her guests. They were prepared for anything but that, and when they were served with consommee, spaghetti —a concession to the chef—and chops and peas, followed by a salad and coffee, the gratitude of the crowd was quite beyond expression. In a burst of enthusiasm Subway Smith suggested a testimonial.

Monty complained bitterly that he himself had never received a glass of a testimonial. He protested that it was not deserved.

"Why should you expect it?" exclaimed Pettingill. "When have you risen from terrapin and artichokes to chops and chicory? When have you given us nectar and ambrosia like this?"

Monty was defeated by a unanimous vote, and Mrs. Dan's testimonial was assured. This matter settled, Peggy and Mrs. Valentine, with Brewster and Pettingill, walked over to the Scala and heard again the last two acts of "Aida." But the audience was different, and the applause.

The next day at noon the chauffeurs from Paris reported for duty, and five gleaming French devil wagons steamed off through the crowd in the direction of Venice. Through Brescia and Verona and Vicenza they passed, scattering showers of silver in their wake and leaving a trail of breathless wonder. Brewster found the pace too fast, and by the time they reached Venice he had a wistful longing to be in the quaint country more slowly. "But this is purely a business trip," he thought, "and I don't expect to enjoy it. Some day I'll come back and do it differently. I could spend hours in a gondola if the only attendants were not more expensive by the trip."

It was there that he was suddenly recalled to his duty from dreams of moonlight on the water by a cablegram which demanded $250 before it could be read. It contained word for word the parable of the ten talents and ended with the simple word "Jones."

CHAPTER XXIII.

THE summer is scarcely a good time to visit Egypt, but Monty and his guests had a desire to see even a little of the northern coast of Africa. It was decided, therefore, that after Athens the Flitter should go south. The yacht had met them at Naples after the automobile procession—a kind of triumphal progress—was disbanded in Florence, and they had sat a la hurried survey of Rome. By the middle of July the party was leaving the heat of Egypt and finding it not half bad. New York was not more than a month away as Brewster reckoned time and distance, and there was still too much money in the treasury. As September drew nearer he got into the habit of frequently forgetting Swearengen Jones until it was too late to retrace his steps. He was coming to the "death struggle," as he termed it, and there was something rather terrorizing in the fear that "the million might die hard." And so these last days and nights were glorious ones, if one could have looked at them with unbiased, untroubled eyes. But every member of his party was praying for the day when the Flitter would be well into the broad Atlantic and the worst over. At Alexandria Brewster had letters to some Englishmen and in the few entertainments that he gave succeeded once again in fairly outdoing Aladdin.

A sheik from the interior was a guest at one of Monty's entertainments. He was a burly, but blooded fellow, with a densely populated harem, and he had been invited more as a curiosity than as one to be honored. As he came aboard the Flitter Monty believed the invitation was more than justified. Mohammed was superb, and the women of the party made so much of him that it was small wonder that his head was turned. He fell desperately in love with Peggy Gray on sight, and with all the complacency of a potentate who has never been crossed he sent for Brewster the next day and told him to "send her around," and he would marry her.

Monty looked bolted seriously for a minute or two, but he was quick to see the wisdom of treating the proposition diplomatically. He tried to make it clear to the sheik that Miss Gray could not accept the honor he wished to confer upon her, but it was not Mohammed's custom to be denied anything he asked for, especially anything feminine. He complacently announced that he would come aboard that afternoon and talk it over with Peggy.

Brewster looked the swarthy gentleman over with unconcealed disgust in his eyes. The mere thought of this ugly brute so much as touching the hand of little Peggy Gray filled him with horror, and yet there was something laughable in the situation. He could not hide the smile that came with the mind picture of Peggy listening to the avowal of the sheik. The Arab misinterpreted this exhibition of mirth. To him the grin indicated friendship and encouragement. He wanted to give Brewster a ring as a pledge of affection, but the American declined the offering and also refused to carry a bag of jewels to Peggy.

"I'll let the old boy come aboard just to see Peggy look a hole through him," he resolved. "No matter how obnoxious it may be, it isn't every girl who can say an oriental potentate has asked her to marry him. If this cursed herder gets disagreeable we may tumble him into the sea for a change."

With the best grace possible he invited the sheik to come aboard and consult Miss Gray in person. Mohammed was a good bit puzzled over the intimation that it would be necessary for him to plead for anything he had expressed a desire to possess.* Brewster confided the news to Rip Van Winkle and Subway Smith, who had gone ashore with him, and the trio agreed that it would be good sport to let the royal proposal come as a surprise to Peggy. Van Winkle returned to the yacht at once, but his companions stayed ashore to do some shopping. When they approached the Flitter later on they observed an unusual commotion on deck.

Mohammed had not tarried long after their departure. He gathered his train together, selected a few costly presents that had been returned from the harem and advanced on the boat without delay. The captain of the Flitter stared long and hard at the gayly bedecked launches and then called to his first officer. Together they watched the ceremonious approach. A couple of brown faced heralds came aboard first and announced the approach of the mighty chief. Captain Perry went forward to greet the sheik as he came over the side of the ship, but he was brushed aside by the advance guards. Half a hundred swarthy fellows crowded aboard, and then came the sheik, the magnification of pomp and pride.

"Where is she?" he asked in his native tongue. The passengers were by this time aware of the visitation and began to straggle on deck, filled with curiosity.

"What do you mean by coming aboard in this manner?" demanded the now irate Captain Perry, shoving a couple of retainers out of his path and facing the beaming suitor. An interpreter took a hand at this juncture, and the doughty captain finally was made to understand the object of the visit. He laughed in the sheik's face and told the cruise had changed Rip into a happier and far more handsome person, as it was only natural that he should have shared the secret with Mary Valentine. He had told the story of the sheik's demand to her as soon as he came aboard, and she had divulged it to Peggy the instant Rip was out of sight.

Brewster found the sheik sitting in state on the upper deck impatiently awaiting the appearance of his charmer. He did not know her name, but he had tranquilly commanded Rip to produce all of the women on board so that he might select Peggy from among them. Van Winkle and Bragdon, who now was in the secret, were preparing to march the ladies past the ruler when Monty came up.

"Has he seen Peggy?" he asked of Van Winkle.

"Not yet. She is dressing for the occasion."

"Well, wait and see what happens to him when she gets over the first shock," laughed Monty.

Just then the sheik discovered Peggy, who, pretty as a picture, drew near the strange group. To her amazement, the sheik rushed forward and obstructed her passage long enough to beat their heads on the deck a few times, after which they arose and tendered two magnificent necklaces. She was prepared for the proposal, but this action disconcerted her. She gasped and looked about in perplexity. Her friends were smiling broadly, and the sheik had placed his hands over his palpitating heart.

"Monty, I have a pain," whispered Rip Van Winkle sympathetically, and Brewster laughed. Peggy did not hesitate an instant after hearing the laugh. She walked straight toward the sheik. Her cheeks were pink, and her eyes were flashing dangerously. The persistent brown slaves followed with the jewels, but she ignored them completely. Brave as she intended to be, she could not repress the shudder of repulsion that went over her as she looked full upon this eager Arab.

Graceful and slender, she stood before the burly Mohammed, but his ardor was not cooled by the presence of so many witnesses. With a thud he dropped to his knees, wabbling for a moment in the successful effort to maintain a poetic equilibrium. Then he began pouring forth volumes of shattered French, English and Arabic sentiments, accompanied by facial contortions so intense that they were little less than grewsome.

"Oh, joy of the sun supreme, jewel of the cool sea, Mohammed is entreaty of Mohammed." It was more as if he were commanding his troops in battle than pleading for the tender compassion of a ladylove. "I am dying for you, queen of the sea and earth and sky. My boats are here, my camels there, and I will build you a marble palace in the sunlit hills if you will but let him bask forever in the glory of your smile."

All this was uttered in a mixture of tongues so atrocious that Subway Smith afterward described it as a salad. The retinue bowed impressively, and two or three gorgeously attired ones applauded as vigorously as if they were approving the actions of a well drilled comic opera chorus. Sailors were hanging in the rigging, on the davits and over the deck house roof.

"Smile, for the gentleman, Peggy," commanded Brewster delightedly. "He wants to take a short bask."

"You are very rude, Mr. Brewster," said Peggy, turning upon him coldly. Then to the waiting expectant sheik, "What is the meaning of this eloquence?"

Mohammed looked bewildered for a moment and then turned to the interpreter, who cleared up the mystery surrounding her English. For the next three or four minutes the air was filled with the "jewels of Africa," "star," "sunlight," "queen," "heavenly joy," "pearl of the desert" and other things in bad English, worse French and perfect Arabic. He was making promises that could not be redeemed if he lived a thousand years. In conclusion the gallant sheik drew a long breath, screwed his face into a simpering grin and played his trump card in unmistakable English. It sounded pathetically like "You're a peach!"

An indecorous roar went up from the white spectators, and a jacky in the rigging, suddenly thinking of home, piped up with a few or two from "The Star Spangled Banner."

Having accomplished what he considered to be his part of the ceremony, the sheik arose and started toward his launch, coolly motioning for her to follow. So far as he was concerned the matter was closed. But Peggy, her heart thumping like a trip hammer, her eyes full of excitement, implored him to stop for a moment.

"I appreciate this great honor, but I have a request to make," she said clearly. Mohammed paused irresolutely and in some irritation.

"Here's where the heathen gets it among the beads," whispered Monty to Mrs. Dan. And he called out, "captain Perry, detail half a dozen men to pick up the beads that are about to slip from his majesty's neck."

CHAPTER XXIV.

PEGGY gave the sheik an entrancing smile, followed by a brief glance at the beaming Miss Valentine, who nodded her head approvingly.

"Won't you give me time to go below and pack my belongings that they may be sent ashore?" she asked naively.

"Thunder!" gasped Monty. "That's no way to turn him down."

"What do you mean, Monty Brewster?" she cried, turning upon him with flashing eyes.

"Why, you're encouraging the old guy," he protested, disappointment in every inflection.

"And what if I am? Isn't it my affair? I think I am right in suspecting that he has asked me to be his wife. Isn't it my privilege to accept him if I wish?"

Brewster's face was a study. He could not believe that she was in earnest, but there was a ghastly feeling that the joke was being turned on him. The rest of the company stared hard at the flushed Peggy and bravely awaited developments.

"It won't do to trifle with this chap, Peggy," said Subway, coming quite close to her. "Don't lead him on. He might get nasty if he thinks you're making sport of him."

"You are quite absurd, Monty," she cried petulantly. "I am not making sport of him."

"Well, then, why don't you tell him to go about his business?"

"I don't see any beads lying around loose," said Rip tormentingly. The sheik, who had said something to the interpreter, and that worthy repeated it for Peggy's benefit.

"The son of the prophet desires that you be as polite as possible, queen of the world. He tires of waiting and commands you to come with him at once."

Peggy winced, and her eyes shot a brief look of scorn at the scowling sheik. In an instant, however, she was smiling agreeably and was turning to-ward the steps.

"Holy mackerel! Where are you going, Peggy?" cried Lotless, the first to turn fearful.

"To throw some things into my trunk," she responded airily. "Will you come with me, Mary?"

"Peggy!" cried Brewster angrily. "This has gone far enough."

"You should have spoken sooner, Monty," she said quietly.

"What are you going to do, Margaret?" cried Mrs. Dan, her eyes wide with amazement.

"I am going to marry the son of the prophet," she replied so decidedly that every one gasped. A moment later she was surrounded by a group of excited women, while Captain Perry was calling the jackies forward in a voice of thunder.

Brewster pushed his way to her side, his face as white as death.

"This isn't a joke, Peggy!" he cried. "Go below, and I'll get rid of the sheik."

Just then the burly Algerian asserted himself. He did not like the way in which his adored one was being handled by the "white dogs," and with two spearmen he rushed up to Brewster, jabbering angrily.

"Stand back, you idiot, or I'll punch your head off!" said Brewster, with sudden emphasis.

It was not until this moment that Peggy realized that there might be a serious side to the little farce she and Mary had decided to play for the astonishment of Brewster. Terror suddenly took the place of mirth, and she clung frantically to Mary's arm.

"I was joking, Monty; only joking," she cried. "Oh, what have I done?"

"It's no fault," he exclaimed, "but battle royal it is, never fear!"

"Stand aside!" roared the sheik threateningly.

The situation was ominous. Frightened as they were, the women could not flee, but stood as if petrified. - Sailors eagerly swarmed to the deck.

"Get off that boat," said Monty, ominously calm, to the interpreter, "or we'll pitch you and your whole mob into the sea."

who had started to follow, struck deep into his heart and made him ready to fight to the death for her.

It took nearly an hour to convince the Algerian that Peggy had misunderstood him and that American women were not to be wooed after the African fashion. He finally departed with his entire train, thoroughly dissatisfied and in high dudgeon. At first he threatened to take her by force; then he agreed to give her another day in which to make up her mind to go with him peacefully, and again he concluded that a bird in the hand was worth two in the bush.

Brewster stood gloomily on the outside of the excited group glowering upon the ugly suitor. Cooler heads had relegated him to this place of security during the diplomatic contest. The sheik's threats of vengeance were direful. He swore by somebody's beard that he would bring 10,000 men to establish his claim by force. His intense desire to fight for her then and there was quelled by Captain Perry's detachment of six lusty sailors, whose big bare fists were shaken vigorously under a few startled noses. It took all the fight out of the sheik and his train. Three retainers fell in to the sea while trying to retreat as far as possible from danger.

Mohammed departed with the irate declaration that he would come another day and that the whole world would tremble at his approach. Disgusted with himself and afraid to meet the eyes of the other men, Brewster went below in search of Peggy. He took time to comfort the anxious women who crowded about him and then asked for Miss Gray. She was in her stateroom and would not come forth. When he knocked at the door a dismal, troubled voice from within told him to go away.

"Come out, Peggy; it's all over," he called.

"Please go away, Monty," she said. "What are you doing in there?"

There was a long pause, and then came the pitiful little wail, "I am unpacking, please, sir."

—The Beaver is this week not large enough for all the local news received. We will make room for it next week.

—The Postmaster and his staff had a busy time last week. The business exceeded that of any Xmas week in the history of the office.

—Mr. John Wilson last week sold his fine 200 acre farm near Selby to Mr. Hugh McKnight. Price, $8,000. It was sold through an "ad." in The Beaver.

—Mr. J. W. Walker, Selby, had a load of Keefer pears on the market last Saturday, which he sold without trouble at $2.00 per bushel. They were beauties.

—Opening of the mite boxes and socials evening, under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid, in the Eastern Methodist church, Jan. 1st. Programmes printed next week.

—The congregation of the Presbyterian church thoughtfully remembered Rev. and Mrs. Conn on Christmas by presenting them with a handsome edition of Dickens' Works and a Morris chair.

—Some one so cruelly wounded Rev. W. H. Emerley's fine couch dog with a pitchfork last week that it had to be killed to put it out of misery. It's a pity the brute who perpetrated the friendish act could not be discovered and severely punished.

—The annual Ball given by the Bachelors in the Town hall last night was a brilliant affair, and thoroughly enjoyed by all. There was a large number of guests from outside town. Gananoque orchestra provided excellent music. The young men are to be congratulated. Their decoration of the hall was in excellent taste.

—Drop in Flour at Kimmerly's. Five Roses $2.45, Keewatin $2.20, Noneuch $2.20. Car Bran coming in, $17.00 ton, Shorts $1.00 per 100. Cheap sugars for Xmas time. Also our celebrated 25c tea. I pay highest prices for Deer and Sheep skins, bring along your fox, coon and mink skins.

—The closing exercises of riverside school were largely attended last Friday afternoon, and a very pleasing Christmas programme was given by the pupils. Miss Bessie Clark was the happy recipient of an illustrated book, the gift of Mr. and Mrs. M. C. Hogarth, as a prize for regular attendance, she having missed but one day during 1905.

—At the session this week of the property committee of the county council of Frontenac the matter of bridges so arranged by Judge Price, whereby, Cross Lake bridge in Kennebec township was done away and discussed. The judge's ruling was that the township should pay twenty-five per cent of the cost of constructing; the matter being submitted though their representative, W. W. Pringle and finally objected to by the corporation. The county council will refuse to take further consideration unless their decision is accepted.

NO ELECTION.

There will be no vote taken on the Electric Light By-law on Monday next. It has been decided to ask the Legislature at its next session to confirm the by-law already passed.

NEW YEAR'S GREETING.

A new year's tea will be served by the ladies of the W.M.S. at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. V. Fralick, Bridge st., on Tuesday evening, 2d Jany. A good programme will be provided. Admission, 15 cts. Everybody welcome.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

It is our custom to correct our mailing lists at the end of each month, and on the first of the following month each reader who during the previous four weeks sent a remittance for The Beaver could notice the credit given by the change on his label. This month we will be a week later, owing to a particularly busy holiday season, and the changes will not be made until the second week in January.

REPORTED HOLD-UP.

Oliver Smith, of Moscow, reported to the police that he had been held up at Vine's Corners, Northern Napanee, about eight o'clock Wednesday night, by robbers, and relieved of $350. He stated that four men driving a team met him. Two jumped out and held his horses, while the other two went through his pockets to the tune mentioned. They then drove away. Smith owns a threshing outfit and was out collecting his accounts. Chief Graham, who looked into the matter, claims there is nothing in the story.

SATURDAY LAST.

Was a day to be remembered by our business men. Although there was not much snow, light loads could be drawn on runners, and the wheeling was never better. The crowd was probably the largest in the history of our holiday trade, and after filling every available space in the town yards, all the church sheds and convenient vacant lots and yards in the business portion of the town were filled with rigs. The merchants are all delighted with their share of the trade, which was a record breaker.

FREE OF DEBT

The debt on St. Alban's church, Odessa, has been paid off. Rev. Rural Dean Dibb received a handsome Christmas present from England, con isting of three chasubles with stoles and maniples to match. The first is of white satin with cloth of gold orphreys, another of crimson silk brocade with orphreys of dark crimson plush and the third of green linen. These vestments are used at the Holy Eucharist, the white at Christmas, Easter and high festivals, the crimson at Whitsuntide and feasts of Martyrs, and the green on ordinary occasions.

A GOOD SHOW.

The Kingston Whig says of Mr. and Mrs. Kyle who were to play in the Brisco Opera House to-night, Friday, "There were large audiences at the Grand Opera House yesterday afternoon and evening. The vaudeville performance of the Kyle company was fully up to expectations, and constituted good entertainment. Mr. and Mrs. Kyle in "Is Marriage a Failure," and another sketch pleased the audience. The acrobatic feats by other members of the company were new and cleverly executed. A number of the latest moving pictures ever seen here were also shown."

HAY BAY TEAMEETING.

The annual anniversary banquet and new year's entertainment in connection with the Hay Bay Methodist church, will be given on Wednesday, Jan. 10th. The banquet to be served in the church from 6 to 8 p.m. is bound to be a record breaker in every particular. The programme will also be a leader and surpass the best of the season. They never fail to please and the profit all who hear them. Selections by the choir and the Hawley duet. Short addresses by Revds. H. Pirritt and Wesley Hicks. Come early or you may not get in. ENTERPRISE.

Dr. Wagar, Dentist, Napanee, will be at the Hamilton House, Enterprise, on Tuesday, 2d January.

Christmas passed off quietly in our midst.

Miss Edith Delmage, after a very successful season as A. Walker's milliner, left for her home on Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. Jerome Wagar and two sons, Edgar and Mitchell, and daughter Miss Nellie, of North Dakota, are visiting relatives in and about town.

The Christmas tree on Friday evening was a decided success, all the young men of our town being remembered by Santa Claus.

Mr. and Mrs. Johnston Graham and family spent Christmas with her sister, Mrs. A. Smith.

The teameeting on Christmas night was a huge success. Proceeds, $100.00.

Mr. and Mrs. E. Harkness, Mr. W. Robinson and children, Mr. and Miss Ward at the Hamilton House on Christmas day.

Mr. Garnet Cox, who has spent the last two years in the Northwest, came home on Xmas morning.

We are glad to hear our trustees have engaged the same teachers for the coming year, with an increase of salary.

The members of the Crown Bank staff spent Christmas at their respective homes.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Brown left on Saturday for their new home at Ayr, where Mr. Brown has secured a position.

A disastrous fire occurred here on Wednesday night, which destroyed the stores of Messrs. E. Fenwick and E. Wagar with their contents. We understand Mr. Fenwick carried an insurance of $2,000. The buildings were owned by Mrs. J. F. Lochhead, of Kingston. Her son, Mr. Alonzo Walker, thinks they were uninsured.

Louis Jackson, an old and respected resident of this place, passed away on Monday. The funeral, which was held on Wednesday, was largely attended. The remains were laid to rest in Centreville vault.

Our snow is nearly all gone.

We noticed an item in Monday's Whig, stating that the Assyrian pedlar named Saad was found on a back street in Enterprise. Such was not the case, the deed being perpetrated some eight or nine miles north of this place and not in Camden township at all, but in Sheffield.

Simon Sexsmith, a former resident of this place, died in the Kingston hospital on Friday.

W. S. Fenwick arrived home on Saturday from Ashburn, also Walter Fenwick, of the B.B.C., Belleville.

Miss Florence Wagar, of Whitby, is spending her holidays at her home.

C. W. Keech intends having a ball on New Years night.

Stanley Bell was presented with a wee baby girl on Christmas day.

Our school meeting, which was held on Wednesday, was well attended.

OBITUARY.

DR. GEORGE F. CHALMERS.

On Tuesday of this week Mr. J. Frank Chalmers received a telegram from San Francisco, that his brother, Dr. George F. Chalmers, of Niles, Cal., near San Francisco, was dead. Deceased was attacked with appendicitis, and was operated on last Friday, and died four days later. He was in his thirty-eighth year, and had been practicing medicine for the past fifteen years at Niles." He leaves a wife and one child. Deceased was a son of the late James Chalmers, of Adolphustown, and besides his mother, who is in San Francisco with her daughters, Grace and Helen, leaves three brothers, J. Frank Chalmers, Napanee, Peter, of Stockton, Cal., and Walter N., at Edmonton, Alberta.

MRS. A. GALBRAITH.

On Dec. 23d, at Croydon, there passed away one of our oldest and most esteemed ladies, Mrs. A. Galbraith, aged 86 years. She took very ill on Wednesday, Dec. 14th, and word was at once sent to all her sons and daughters, who in a short time were with her, there being three sons and two daughters, Messrs. R. Galbraith and Andrew Galbraith, Colebrook; Wm. at home, and Mrs. B. Haggerty, Wellington, and Mrs. H. Hall, Colebrook, who were all there to receive a mother's last message of love. Of all the old residents none will be more truly missed. In religion she was a Presbyterian, and died very happy in God's promises. The funeral service was held in the Presbyterian church at Reaboile, on Monday, Dec. 25th, the Rev. Mr. Spence, of Tamworth, officiating, and the remains were interred in the church at Centreville to await burial in the spring.

MRS. REYNER.

The many friends of Mrs. Reyner, formerly Mrs. G. Johnston, of Ernestown Station, will be pained to hear of her death which occurred about a week ago at Uniontown, Pa., after a brief illness. The commencement of her illness was pleurisy which developed into pneumonia, and from this other complications followed, and the immediate cause of her death was due to Bright's disease. Deceased was well known and beloved by all. She was of a bright, cheerful disposition and when she left here but four months ago she was the picture of perfect health. Her only son, R. A. Johnston, C.P.R. agent at Apple Hill, was summoned when she became ill and was with her to the last. The remains were brought to Ernestown Station last Friday, and placed in the vault for interment later. Her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Amey, Ernestown, have the sympathy of a host of friends in their bereavement.

MARY ANN LOLAN,

relict of the late Thomas Moyle, of Richmond Township, died at the residence of her son-in-law, Uriah Wilson, Esq., M.P., on Christmas morning. She was born Nov. 7th, 1821, in the Township of Richmond, a daughter of Patrick and Mary Lolan. In 1838 she was married to Thomas Moyle, by the Rev. Salters Givens. Her early days were all spent in Richmond, and for the last fifty years she has resided in Napanee and vicinity. For the past twenty-five years she has lived in Napanee with her daughter. About fifteen years ago she became afflicted with total blindness, but until quite recently she had been active and had the possession of all her other faculties, which were exceptionally bright. She lived a simple, unassuming life, much loved by her children, grandchildren and relatives and highly respected by her intimate friends. She bore her sad affliction with christian fortitude. In her early life she became a member of the Methodist church, and for over seventy years has been a consistent church member. Of a large family of fifteen only two survive, Mrs. Jas. Reid, R. Spencer, of Vancouver, B.C., and Mrs. Robt. S. Denison, of Selby. She is survived by three daughters, Mary, wife of Uriah Wilson, M.P., Margaret and Susie. Two sons died in early school. She is also survived by four grandchildren and six great grandchildren. The funeral services were conducted at the home of Mr. Wilson on Wednesday afternoon by the Rev. W. H. Emsley, pastor of the Eastern Methodist church, and the remains were conveyed to the eastern cemetery vault.

THE CLOSING OLD YEAR

WITH SOME THOUGHTS FULL OF ENCOURAGEMENT FOR NEW.

"TO THE TOP OF PISGAH"

Retrospect and Prospect Afforded by Our Ascent of the Pisgah Heights of Human Life — What Says the Past But Experience That Teaches How to Mould the Future For Further Efforts.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1905, by Frederick Dwyer, of Toronto, at the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Dec. 24.—In the prospect and retrospect afforded by our ascent of the Pisgah heights of human life and experience the preacher finds a topic appropriate to the closing old year and full of encouragement for the new. The text is Deuteronomy xxxiv., 1. "To the top of Pisgah."

I would that Victor Hugo's works were by my side. I would find in one of his books—I think the one entitled "Ninety-three" — a marvelous description of a storm in midocean. The great ship, which, I believe, was a man-of-war, was being tumbled about in the heavy billows. The hurricane was shrieking in a pandemonium of wrath. Only those who have been tossed about by a cyclone know the terror of land know what the horrors of such a storm must have been. Suddenly the dangers of the ship were momentarily intensified by another danger nearer at hand. The ship was rolling this way and that. The huge cannon were straining at the chains that held them in place. Suddenly one of these cannon broke loose, and with frightful velocity it started on its juggernaut-like mission of destruction. While the power of the ship could lift itself at one point its nose down into the valleys of the waters, like a tenpin ball, the vagabond cannon would rush along the length of the deck and crash into the masts until the terrified sailors almost heard the last snap under their feet. Then when the ship would lurch to leeward and the gunwales would be submerged under the raging waters the huge iron monster would stop just a minute. The next instant it would make a dash in the opposite until, like a battering ram, it seemed as though it would splinter the side of the hull into kindlings. Hoover upon horror followed in its track. It mangled the brave seamen who were trying to lasso it as a cowboy upon western prairie would throw the lariat about the horns of a wild steer. Now it sent the sailors fleeing for their lives like a covey of partridges scurrying to the woods after the pointer has made them fly up from the ambush. Now again it wrenched the iron bar out of the hands of the man who was trying to clog the gun carriage's wheels and thus make clear across the deck and far out into the abysmal depths to find a watery grave.

The dangers of the battlefield were child's play compared to the dangers which threatened that ship. And yet as I read that account many years ago I said to myself: "Those sailors were having an awful struggle, but very similar are the multitudinous dangers and difficulties that environ most of us during the voyage of life. The storms are not April showers, but December tornadoes. The dangers that threaten to demolish us not only come from without, but assail us from within the ship. It is hurricane after hurricane, bombardment after bombardment, battling wave after battling wave, rolling juggernaut followed by rolling Juggernaut."

But though the dangers and storms of life seem to be so many and black, while we are passing through them, yet in almost every life there comes a time when, like Moses, we can stand upon Pisgah's heights, where we can truly see that all these troubles and misfortunes have been working together for our good. As Moses was allowed to climb to the top of Mount Nebo and look off upon the promised land the results of our life work. Then we can see into the future and know that the germ seeds we have planted shall yield their harvests thirty, sixty and a hundred fold. And then we can look back into the past, as well as we can look future and see how God has been leading us all the way. Let us first start with a retrospect.

It is always natural for the travelers up the mountain heights to look back toward the land over which they have come. Do you not suppose Balboa turned his eyes toward Spain as well as toward the occident when he saw the Pacific Ocean roll at his feet? Do you not suppose De Soto and Raleigh and Sir Francis Drake and Captain Cook and Marquette and La Salle and Livingstone and Stanley and all the modern as well as ancient navigators and discoverers have looked toward their home lands as well as toward the regions to which they were heading? Thus the most natural place toward which Moses turned his eyes after he had climbed Pisgah's heights was to the south and the east and the north as well as toward the west. He looked toward the geographical scenes of his childhood and middle age and old age as well as toward the future and the promised land.

How good God has been to Moses! How good he has been to us! Let us for a moment go back to the scenes of our infancy, as Moses' thoughts turned to the river Nile and to Egypt. Let us not then have some one to love us and provide for us during the days of our childhood? When Stephen Girard, the great president of Union College, became a very old man, he lapsed into a beautiful second childhood. Day by day his faithful wife used to sing the same lullabies and hymns which his mother once sang him to sleep. Then the old man would close his eyes like a little babe. He continually kept calling over the names of his mother and father and sisters and brothers. And when he would utter such prayers for the last time he closed with the simply evening prayer, "Now I lay me down to sleep; I pray the Lord my soul to keep." If he lived over again the scenes of childhood a strange peace came to his soul. So with Moses. So with us. The associations of childhood speak to us of the infinite love and care that were about us then and encourage us to hope that they will be with us to the end.

Then, like Moses, we turn our eyes from Egypt toward the wilderness. What is the strange storm there in our young manhood and middle life? Is it a rainstorm? No, it looks more like a snowstorm. And yet as we reach up and gather a handful of the falling flakes they do not melt in our hands, though they are as white as the driven snow. No, my friends, that is not a snowstorm falling in the wilderness. It is a shower of manna, which we see and feel. That is the provision that made for you in the years of your wilderness wanderings, which has been sufficient for you thus far in your daily bread. Has there been a day in the past life when God's manna has failed? There have been crisis in your life, as there were in the life of Moses—perhaps financial crisis, but day by day and week by week, year by year, God has fed you. Has he not, my brother? Has it not been so? Is not your time of life to be able to stand upon Pisgah's heights and say, "God has taken care of me and my family through life, yea, all the way through."

Sometimes we did not understand how God was feeding us when even the cupboard was empty. But feed us and ours he always did. There is a beautiful legend told about the convent of St. Sabina of Rome. Many years ago, when St. Dominic was at the head of this convent, there came a famine. What were the inmates to do? "Come," said the leader; "let us go into the refectory and sit down at the table." If we cannot provide food for ourselves God will do so for us." With that St. Dominic and his friars went to the refectory and sat down. Then the leader lifted his hands and made a prayer like this: "O God, we thank thee for the food which thou hast given us in the past, and we thank thee for the food which thou art going to give us now." No sooner had the blessing been said than, behold, two beautiful angels appeared clothed in white, the one bore a basket of bread, the other a pitcher of wine. They silently placed the basket and the pitcher upon the table and then disappeared. Then St. Dominic turned to his friars and said, "Eat, children, what God hath sent you by his angels." This only is a legend, but it is a legend which, in a figurative sense, has been seen in our times as well as in that of Moses. Sometimes God could not send angels to those who was to come from, but come it always did. God has fed us as truly as in the days when angels ministered to the wants of the inmates of St. Sabina convent. Stand ye not upon Pisgah's heights to-day? Twenty, forty, fifty years of experience care are reaching out before you. Thank God to-day for the food he has given to you to eat, for the garments he has given to you to wear and for the house in which you and yours have lived. The unexpected supplies have always been yours, but the temporal necessities have always been supplied. Day by day, week by week, month by month, year by year, the manna has fallen at your feet and at the feet of your dear ones.

But the Pisgah heights offer to us another retrospect. Looking away back into the dim past, we can see God and his our seeming troubles and misfortunes have been the means of drawing us closer and closer to God and to his leadings. They have been not stumbling blocks, but stepping stones to higher spiritual attainment. God has always led us up to his mountain tops of inspiration by first leading us down into the deep valleys of despair. It is only by casting us down that he is able to lift us up. Let me illustrate my thought by Moses' life.

Standing upon the top of Pisgah today, I see the great lawgiver turning his eyes toward Egypt. He sees the long groups of men going and coming. "What is the matter, Moses?" I ask. "Do you see anything strange?" "Yes," answers the mighty leader. "I see men as officers of the law hunting my life. One hundred and twenty years ago the Hebrew slaves began to multiply so rapidly that Pharaoh ordered that every male child born to a Hebrew woman should be slain. Those officers are after me." "What else dost thou see, O leader?" "I see a woman and her eldest daughter running away toward the river. They put a little babe in her arms. They are hiding that child among the bulrushes of the river. That child was put there." "What else dost thou see, O mighty chieftain?" "I see a princess of Pharaoh's court coming down to the river to bathe. I see her bending over that child and then adopting him as her own son." "What else dost thou see, O leader?" "In that adoption I see how it was made possible for me to be educated. I see that through this education I was fitted mentally to do the work God has given to me to do. Through that education I became the lawyer, the statesman, the molder of a people who are to become possessors of yonder promised land. God fitted me for my work by first making me a foundling and a social outcast."

Troubles must have a larger perspective if we are to see them aright as messengers of mercy. Thomas Fuller, the quaint English divine, once said that troubles appeared to him at close view "a great deal like a piece of tapestry turned wrong side out. It seemed to be nothing but a great conglomeration of nonsense. It was without head or foot. Confusion itself had no such method in it. It was a company of thrums and threads with many pieces and patches of several colors, all ugly and colors, all which signified nothing to my understanding." Then Dr. Fuller turned the right side of the tapestry to the delighted eyes of his auditory and he said: "Now, though the wrong side is all a mystery, how beautiful is the right side! Here are all beauties and all right proportions. We use his exact words, "Here is history not worked with a pen, but wrought with a needle." Such are the dealings of God with us. When we look at our troubles close at hand we seem to be looking at a piece of tapestry wrong side out, but when we stand with Moses upon Pisgah's heights and look at our troubles through the inspired vision of the years we see why those troubles came and how they were the means of fitting us for our lifelong usefulness.

Our past troubles fitted us and are fitting us for the work God has given us to do. Thank God for the east wind as well as for the west wind.

But our Pisgah heights to-day have their visions ahead, as well as their explained Egyptian mysteries and their pillars of fire and of cloud. The chapter of my text tells us that God took Moses "to the mountain of Nebo, to the top of Pisgah, that is over against Jericho. And the Lord showed him all the land of Gilead and Dan and all Naphtali and the land of Ephraim and Manasseh and all the land of Judah unto the utmost sea." Do you know what that panorama meant, in a nutshell? God took Moses upon the top of Pisgah and said: "See, Moses, yonder is the promised land. Thy work in Egypt is not to go for naught. Thy wanderings in the wilderness seemed to lead to and around and around in a useless circle, but those wanderings have led thy people to the crystal gates of the Jordan. Now the children of Israel shall pass over to the grapes of Eschol and to the land which is flowing with milk and honey. Look and see what is to be the result of thy noble work!" So God lets us climb to the Pisgah heights to see the result of our work. The vision is here for you now to see if you are willing to open your eyes and look.

In the first place, we can see in the dim future a noble spiritual work which our children shall do after we are dead. Ah, that family was a hard one for you to raise! I am not now alluding to the mere question of food and clothing. I mean more than that. I mean the spiritual raising of them. Let me see. You have five children. Three of those children were born good. They never gave you any trouble. But two of them—and especially the youngest son—were always in mischief. The neighbors used to say of the youngest, "He will be a very good man or a very bad one." Yes, and it seemed as though the evil would win out in his nature. Then he took to drink. Oh, how many, many anxious nights you used to have! Like David, you were continually mourning for your wayward Absalom. But you have changed of late. The cloud has left your face and I know the good news. The neighbors have told it to me. "What," you say, "have you heard it too? Who told you that all my children are now members of the church and that my youngest boy was converted about a year ago and is going to be a Christian missionary?" Yes, I have heard it. You are standing upon Pisgah's heights, O father, O mother. Not only are your boys and girls spiritually safe, but like Moses and Aaron and Miriam you can look off upon their promised land. You can picture their future lives. You can look upon their blessed homes, rearing Christian children and perhaps preaching in Christian pulpits. You can look upon their blessed work your children are all safe in Christ's love and pardon.

Again in reference to our other lines of work—oh, we can have wonderful visions in reference to them! For instance, we can look upon the progress in the temperance cause and in the purity cause and in the church cause. We have been mightily discouraged at times. Sin seemed to be intrenched in Gibraltar fortresses. It seemed to be impossible to mock us and taunt at us as the enemies of God were able to taunt at the blinded Samson. We kept saying to ourselves, "Does it pay?" But as you grow older and look into the past you find that progress has been made. The tides of blessing each day, each month, each year, are a little higher. Each makes the world a little better than its predecessor. Then you began to see what is going to be done for Christ within the next two centuries. "My Lord and my God," you cry, "I thank thee for this Pisgah vision. I thank thee that I am standing upon Pisgah's heights to-day. I thank thee that I can again descend into the valleys and work a little longer in thy harvest fields for the consummation of thy earthly glory."

But there is always one awful reality-sadness that comes to us when we stand upon Pisgah's heights, and that is the realization that from an earthly standpoint we can never overcome the evil results of the past. Methinks I can see Moses as he looks off upon that land flowing with milk and honey. He raises his eyes to God and says, "Lord, I will thou not be pleased to pass over with my people for a little while?" "Nay," says God; "nay. Dost thou not remember when the people cried for water and thou didst make water gush from the rock of Horeb and then take all the credit unto thyself, saying, 'Hear now, ye rebels; must we fetch you water out of this rock?' Thou didst not give me the glory. Then I said until thee thou couldst not enter into the promised land. Because of that sin thou

Cost of Producing Milk.

At a number of experiment stations records were kept to determine the cost of producing milk. At four of the stations it cost 55 cents to produce 100 pounds. This made the cost of one pound of butter fat 13.8 cents. Milk was produced at the lowest cost during the summer, and at the highest during winter. This, of course, is to be expected.

STELLA.

Holidays have come at last. We hope the teachers and pupils will be well rested for the New Year's work.

The weekly trips of the steamer Aletha were well patronized on account of the good weather which we have been enjoying. It was almost fit for a fairly boat up to the end.

We are glad to see so many of our friends returned home for the Xmas holidays.

Messrs. Waddle and John Reid are home from the Northwest, where they have been since early spring.

Mr. Samuel Allen intends spending the winter with his parents, after an absence of about twenty-five years in Winnipeg.

The concert and Xmas tree given last week by the Church of England was well attended, and all proclaimed it a success. We are expecting great things of the Presbyterians, however, in their concert this week.

Our mail has been all landed safely on our shores again.

We are sorry to hear that Roy Gibson is still confined to his bed.

Election is cancelled as each one candidate for Reeve resigned, and the Councillors were elected by acclamation.

A number of our young men are getting up a hop for New Years night.

A number of young people motored taking in the entertainment at Vennachai on Christmas night.

Mr. Samuel and Mr. C. McCoy have sold their mine of value to an excellent firm, and all look to work with are being hauled though the winter, with the purpose of spending the nine and working this winter.

Our election is causing great excitement, and we hope for grand returns to-day.

WISE AND OTHERWISE.

"Judge," said Mrs. Stayem to the magistrate, who had recently come to board with her, "I'm particularly anxious to have you try this chicken soup."

"I have tried it," replied the magistrate, "and my decision is that the chicken has proved an alibi."

It Reaches the Spot.—There are few remedies before the public to-day as meritorious in removing pain and allaying and preventing pulmonary dis orders as Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil. It has demonstrated its powers in thousands of instances and in a large number of testimonials as to great value as a medicine could not get were there occasion for it. It is for sale everywhere.

"What are money orders, pa?"

"Your mother's letters to me when she is on a vacation."

A Cure for Rheumatism— The intrusion of uric acid into the blood vessels is a fruitful cause of rheumatic pains. This irregularity is owing to a deranged and unhealthy condition of the liver. Anyone suffering from this painful affection will find a remedy in Parmelee's Vegetable Pills. Their action upon the kidneys is pronounced and most beneficial, and by restoring healthy action, they correct impurities in the blood.

The first slice of goose had been cut and the minister of the Zion church was helping the second, in anticipation as was displayed in the faces around.

"Dat's as fine a goose as I ever saw, brudder Williams," he said to the carver, "Where did you get such a fine one?"

"Well, now, Mosah Rawley," said the carver of the goose, with a sudden flush of scorn in his voice, "I'd preach a special sermon I neber axes you where you got it, 'cordin' to my dat's a trivial matter, anyway."

Impurities in the blood—When the secretions of the kidneys become clogged, impurities in the blood are almost sure to follow, and general derangement of the system ensues. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will regulate the kidneys, so that they will maintain healthy action and prevent the complications which certainly come when there is derangement of these delicate organs. As a resolvative these Pills are in the first rank.

"Who ever heard of a perfect man?" asked an elderly revivalist. "Why, there's just such a man! I have seen him. I've evangelized him. That's of course no one has ever seen a perfect man, and consequently the statement of the revivalist was received with silence. The revivalist continued.—"Who ever saw a perfect woman? Why, I've evangelized such a man across. 'Do you mean to say, ma'am,' I asked her, 'that you don't have seen a perfect woman?' 'Well, I can't just say that I have seen her,' she evangelized, replied, 'but I have heard a powerful lot about her; my husband's perfect, I know.'"

Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator does its require the help of any purgative medicine to complete the cure. Give it a trial and be convinced.

"I saved five dollars last night." "How?"

"The water tap wouldn't work, so I got down amongst the mud and made like a plumber, and the tap behaves itself this morning."

The pain-killing medicine, Hollo-way's Corn Cure, removes all kinds of corns, warts, etc., even the most difficult to remove cannot withstand its wonderful remedy.

Hatter—As I understand it, the first principle of socialism is to divide with your brother man.

Hatter—No, sir. It is to make your brother share and share alike.

The greater the irritation in the throat the more distressing the cough becomes. Coughing is the effort of Nature to expel this irritating substance from the air passages. Hirkle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup will heal the inflamed parts, which cause the cough, and restore them to a healthy state, the cough disappearing under the curative effects of the medicine. It is pleasant to the taste, and price, 25 cents, is within the reach of all.

He—You know someone has said, 'If you would make a lasting book of books, take for the sole tongue of a woman.'

She—Yes, and for the uppers the cheek of the man who said it.

Artemus looked up and said:

"Papa," said the little boy, "is Rotterdam swearing?"

"No," was the answer, "that is the name of a city in Holland. Why?"

"Well," said the little boy, "Fannie Jones and some of my other friends and I said we'd hoped it would rot-ter-dam teeth out."

Rev. Mr. Pullet—Too bad about Ilas Higbee's sudden death.

Widow—Deed, it is. Only las' night I was tellin' him we'd a cloth an' his voice was so loud an' strong.

He—Just one kiss, dear—I'll promise not to tell my mother.

She—Oh, that's what all the men say. Then gentlemen never proceed to take the rest without asking.

A Yankee passenger in a train the other day was amusing his fellow travelers with his "tall" stories, and remarked, "Why, sir, I once had a cat as corry-backed as any monkey that I finished the next. "This," says the Irishman on board Yorkshireman, who sat next to him. "Man, that's how!" "Why, sir," said the Yankee, "that's how I used to keep my cat from puttin' the folks out for back rent."

"Pat, for a wonder you're late, your wife has been waiting for you."

"Yis, sor. They're th' bist O iver tasted."

An old Scotchman, being asked how he was getting on, said that he was all right, "Oh it waana for the rheumatism in the left leg."

"Ah, John," said the inquirer, "be thankful, for there is no mistake you are getting old, like the rest of us, and old age doesn't come alone."

"Auld age, sir," returned John, "I wonder to hear ye. Auld age has nasthing tae dae wi't. Here's my liter leg fast as auld; an' its sound and soople yet."

A BAD BRUISE.

Often causes a good deal of trouble. The best cure is a prompt application of Nerviline which instantly stops the pain, prevents swelling, removes all blackness and discoloration. Nerviline is antiseptic—prevents blood poisoning. No liniment so strong, so penetrating, so swift to destroy pain. You cannot get a substitute for Nerviline. Polson's Nerviline. For nearly fifty years it has been the standard family liniment of Canada.

NEW ONTARIO.

Stella, Dec. 25th, 1905.

To the Editor of The Beaver,—

Dear Sir,—Permit me in your valuable paper to give a few impressions concerning our new Northland from which I have lately returned. Great progress has been made in our directions since I was there two years ago. More than one hundred miles of railroad have been built, and is being successfully operated. The passenger traffic is surprising. The new mining town of Cobalt has been founded, and is being rapidly built up. The towns of Haileybury and New Liskeard are growing in size and importance. The stores are doing a good business and the hotels are crowded with men, who are going in to prospect for mineral, for lands or timber. Others are going in to work in the lumber camps and on the railroad. The spirit of enterprise and confidence in the future prosperity of this part of our great Province is visible on every hand.

There is one drawback, however, and only one, so far as I could see. A large part of the country on which the first settlers had to locate, or, as the country is level and no very large streams to be bridged, all that would be required would be the cutting off the timber off a space about twelve feet in width. From these roads settlers could open roads to their farms as required.

Farm produce is in great demand and the greatest need of that country at the present time is more men who are prepared to clear the land and raise produce to supply the great army of miners, lumbermen and pleasure seekers, who are coming in. But, as I said before, I do not think the land will be settled for a long time except roads are opened up through each township. I might say, that the few settlers that I saw in one of the front townships had good crops, and are getting well repaid for their toil. I never saw better potatoes or saw more than there were.

Thanking you for your kindness in publishing this long letter, I am

Yours very truly,
HENRY FILSON.

Bowser's Millions

That night Brewster entertained on board the yacht, several resident French and English acquaintances being the guests of honor. The story of the day was told by Mrs. Dan Delmille, commissioned especially for the duty. She painted the scene so vividly that the guests laughed with joy over the discomfiture of the sheik. Peggy and Brewster found themselves looking sheepishly at one another now and then in the course of the recital. She purposely had avoided him during the evening, but she had gamely endured the raillery that came from the rest of the party. If she was to blame she was not surprising. Now that it was over the whole affair appalled her more than she could have supposed. When several of the guests of the evening soberly announced that Mohammed was a dangerous man and even an object of worry to the government she felt a strange catch in her throat, and her now mirthless eyes turned instinctively to Brewster, who, it seemed, was the sheik's special object of aversion.

The next day she and Monty talked it over. The penitence of both was manifest to behold. Each denied the other the privilege of assuming all the blame, and both were so happy that Mohammed's little more than a memory even in their conversation so far as prominence was concerned. But all day long the harbor was full of fisher boats, and that night they still were lolling about, sinister, restless, mysterious, like purposeless buzzards. And the dark men on board were ready to do no fish; neither were they minding the nets that lay dry and folded in the bottom of their boats.

Late into the night there was revelry on board the Flitter, more guests having come out from the city. The dark hours before the dawn of day had arrived before they put off for shore, but the fisher boats still were bobbing about in the black waters of the harbor. The lights gradually disappeared from the portholes of the yacht, and the tired watch was about to be relieved. Monty Brewster and Peggy retreated on deck after the guests had gone over the side of the vessel. They were leaning over the rail all listening to the jovial voices of the visitors as they grew fainter and fainter in the distance. The lights of the town were few, but they could plainly be seen from the offing.

"Are you tired, Peggy?" asked Bywater, with a touch of tenderness. Somehow of late he had often felt a strange desire to take her in his arms, and now it was strong upon him. She was very near, and there was a drooping weariness in her attitude which seemed to demand protection.

"I have a queer feeling that something awful is going to happen tonight, Monty," she answered, trouble in her soft voice.

"You're nervous; that's all," he said, "and you should go to sleep. Good night." Their hands touched in the darkness, and the thrill that went over him told a truth of which he had been only vaguely conscious. The power of it made him exultant. Yet when he thought of her and her too quiet affection for him it left him despondent.

Something bumped against the side of the ship, and a scraping sound followed. Then came other gentle thuds combined with the soft swish of water disturbed. Peggy and Brewster were on the point of going below when their attention was caught by these strange sounds.

"What is it?" she asked as they paused irresolutely. He strode to the rail, the girl following close behind. Three sharp little whistles came from above the second deck, but before they had time even to speculate as to their meaning the result was in evidence.

Over the sides of the ship came shadowy forms as if by magic; at their backs panther-like bodies dropped to the deck with stealthy thuds, as if coming from the inky sky above. There was an instant of dreadful calm and then fierce strain. A dozen sinewy forms hurled themselves upon Brewster, who, taken completely by surprise, was thrown to the deck in an instant, his struggles of no help being checked by heavy hands. Peggy's scream was cut off as quickly, and, paralyzed by terror, she felt herself engulfed in strong arms, while another pair held to silence. It all happened so quickly that there was no chance to give the alarm, no opportunity to resist.

Brewster felt himself lifted bodily, and then there was the sensation of falling. He struck something forcibly with all his weight and felt back with a crash to the deck. Afterward he found that the effort to throw him overboard had failed only because his assailants in their haste had hurled him against an unseen stanchion. Peggy was borne forward and lowered as they into arms that received her roughly upon something hard. There was a jerky, rocking motion, the sudden splash of oars, and then she knew no more.

The invaders had planned with a craftiness and patience that deserved success. For hours they had waited, silently, watchfully and with deadly assurance. How they crept up to the Flitter in such numbers and how the more daring came aboard long before the blow was struck no one ever explained. So quickly and so accurately was the abduction performed that the boats were well clear of the yacht before alarm was given by one of the watch, who had been overlooked in the careful assault.

Sleepy sailors rushed on deck with a promptness that was amazing. Very quickly they had found and unbound Brewster, carried a couple of wounded shipmates below and had Captain Perry in his pajamas on deck to take command.

"The searchlight!" cried Brewster frantically. "The devils have stolen Miss Grey."

While swift hands were lowering the boats for the chase others were carrying firearms on deck. The searchlight threw its mighty white arm out over the water before many seconds had passed, and eager eyes were looking for the boats of the pillagers. The Arabs had reckoned without the searchlight. Their fierce exultation died suddenly when the mysterious streak of light shot into the sky and then swept down upon the sea, hunting them out of the darkness like a great and relentless eye.

The Flitter's boats were in the water and manned by sturdy oarsmen before the glad cry went up that the robber fleet had been discovered. They were so near the yacht that it was evident the dusky tribesmen were poor oarsmen. In the clear light from the ship's deck they could be seen paddling wildly, their white robes fluttering as though inspired by fear. There were four boats, all of them crowded to the gunwales.

"Keep the light on them, captain!" shouted Monty from below. "Try to pick out the boat that has Miss Grey on board. Pull away, boys! This means a hundred dollars to every one of you—yes, a thousand if we have to fight for her!"

Baby beef is the highly finished product that sells for the highest figure because the muscles, tendons and tissues are not hardened by age and use.

It is tender and juicy, like a sappy, young tree.

It costs, on the average, about 3c to make 1 lb. of gain at one year, and about 7c. at two years, and so on, because the digestive powers are more energetic in proportion to size in older stock.

There should be no let up in feeding the 365 days of the year.

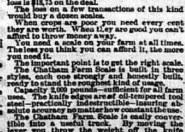
CHATHAM FARM SCALE



You need a Scale on your farm.

You need it right now—to-day.

Every day you put it off you lose money.

Suppose you sell some hogs or a horse around, and trust to your dealer's scales, which are 1.50 out. That means a loss to you of 50 cents on every 100 pound hogs.

There are just 365 bushels of grain at 75 cents. This dealer's scales are only 1/40 out, but your loss is $18.25 on the deal.

The loss on a few transactions of this kind would buy a dozen scales.

When crops are poor you need every cent they are worth. When they are good you can't afford to throw money away.

Weigh and sell from your farm at all times. The loss you think you can afford it, the more you lose.

The important point is to get the right scale.

The Chatham Farm Scale is made in three styles, each one strongly and honestly built, and each one guaranteed for all time.

Capacity, 2,000 lbs. Convenient for all farm use. The knife edges are of oil-tempered tool steel, and the bearings are of hardened steel. Absolute accuracy no matter how constant the use.

The platform is of hardwood, narrow slats, thin enough to fit into a vertical truck.

The beam has a weight of 100 lbs., with edges on to the solid frame of the truck. The bearings for the knife edges are of tool steel, fitted to the truck. When you move the lever to the right or left, the weight of the beam instantly adjusts itself without any trouble to you. It is the only scale made in Canada that will do this.

The Chatham Farm Scale is absolutely accurate. We guarantee this. Every scale we ship is tested, it is thoroughly gone over by the Government Inspector, and a Government certificate stamps each scale and balance with his official seal. We give you a Chatham Farm Scale Book which goes with the scale.

We will ship a Chatham Farm Scale anywhere in Canada. Don't send us any money. Send us a letter and we will ship the scale to you as fast as the railroad can get it to you. Our prices are reasonable, and terms easy. Get the most liberal ever offered. Ask your neighbor, he has one. Send us your name and address to-day, and we'll mail you our booklet about the Chatham Farm Scale.

You may make considerable loss of money to you by not writing us the post card to-day, while you think of it?

CHATHAM INCUBATOR

Chicken raising a very easy and simple way of adding to the farm's cash profits.

Poultry raising pays.

People who tell you that there is no money in raising chicken may have been trying to make money in the business by being setting hens as hatch as they might get around to it, or they might set a gold mine in the cabbage patch. The hens might have been set by lazy eggs, at a lumberjack or brooder she is outclassed. That's the business we have specialized on for years, and know that they do it perfectly and successfully.

Our incubators are extensively conducted, pays far better than any other business for the amount of time and capital invested.

Thousands of poultry-raisers—men and women—have made a success of it, and the United Kingdom have proved to their satisfaction that it is profitable. Every one of our customers is thoroughly posted, the machine is built on right principles, the incubator has a perfect thermometer attached, and the workmanship the best.

The Chatham Incubator and Brooder is simple as well as scientific in construction—a child can run it. Send for our handsomely illustrated booklet entitled, "How to Make Money Out of Chicks."

Our proposition is this: We will ship you the Chatham Incubator and Brooder, freight prepaid, and

A CHRISTMAS AT HOME.

Situated on the shore of Hay Bay is the large farm residence of the late Hiram Huffman now the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ezra M. Huffman, where on Xmas day assembled his brother, sisters and their children, also her parents, Mr. and Mrs. E Parks, to enjoy the day together, and in partaking of a sumptuous dinner all bowed in thankfulness to God, for His care and mercies of the past year and for His protection and guidance during the coming year. At four o'clock all repaired to a private room where stood a well loaded Xmas tree from which Santa Claus distributed over one hundred presents. After this the crowd dispersed wishing their host and hostess a very happy new year.

POLLARD—NICHOLS.

A pretty marriage was solemnized at the Church of St. Mary Magdalene on Wednesday evening, 27th Dec., at 8 o'clock, Rev. Canon Jarvis officiating. The contracting parties were Miss Flora Belle, daughter of Mrs. John Pollard, and Mr. Oscar Alfred Nichols, of Portsmouth, N.H. The sacred edifice was crowded with guests and friends, and the full ceremonial of the Church of England was gone through with. Promptly at 8 o'clock the fair bride entered, accompanied by her brother, Mr. E. J. Pollard. The bride was gowned in white silk, with the conventional bridal veil and orange blossoms, and carried a bouquet of pink roses. She was ably supported by her sister, Miss Mattie Pollard, dressed in pink voile, and Miss Hyparia Fox, in white silk, each carrying a bouquet of pink roses. The little flower girls were Myrtle Tory, Hamilton, and Janet Pedemy, of London. The groom was assisted by Mr. Chas. Chase, of Toronto. After the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's mother, and later the happy couple took the midnight train east to their home at Portsmouth. The popularity of the bride was shown by the large number of beautiful presents she received. The Beaver with a host of friends extends congratulations.

A BRUTAL DEED.

Last Friday afternoon Leo Saad, an Assyrian pedlar, was attacked on the highway north of Enterprise, and left for dead, the perpetrator of the deed evidently being frightened away by the approach of a train before he had time to rob his victim. Saad was severely wounded about the head, apparently with an axe, which was later found at the home of a farmer where he had stayed the day before. The unfortunate man was attended to by Dr. Carscallen, of Enterprise, and taken to Hotel Dieu, Kingston, where several bones were removed from his head, and the wounds dressed. It was thought he could not possibly recover, as serious was the nature of the wounds, but at present he seems to be recovering. Thomas Newton, an English emigrant, who works for Mr. Luke Whelan, near where the deed was committed, and at whose place Saad stayed Thursday night, was arrested on Monday and locked up at Tamworth. He was brought before Magistrate James Aylsworth on Tuesday, pleaded not guilty, and was remanded for three days, to await the result as to whether Saad will survive. Saad was much better Wednesday and recognized a visitor from Napanee, calling her by name. Also spoke about friends in Napanee. The hospital doctors were very much encouraged, and hope for his ultimate recovery.

GRETNA.

Our Christmas tree entertainment given last Friday night, was the best ever held in this church. The programme would have done credit to any town or city in the country. The numbers were all popular and well rendered. The presents, gifts and prizes which adorned the Xmas tree, were numerous and well chosen. The order was all that could be desired, and much credit is due to our esteemed pastor who filled the chair in such a firm and masterly manner. He fully deserved the substantial present handed him from the tree. The officers of the school return thanks to the public for their patronage and wish all hands a right happy New year.
